INTRODUCTION.

I. i, ii.
Materials of the work.

II. ii—iv.
Judgment for the restoration of the seisin of the Earldom of Huntingdon.
Such seisin restored by special judgment, but not by reason of the alleged wardship.

III. iv, v.
The homage of Alexander III., 6 Ed. I. 1278.
This document specially noticed in the antient inventories.

IV. v—viii.
Rental of the possessions held by Alexander III. within the modern boundary of England.
Gross rental of the estates of the King of Scotland.
Tenures, various.
Regalities of the King of Scots in Tynedale.

V. viii—l.
Original appeal on behalf of the Seven Earls of Scotland to the authority of Edward I.—Letter relating to the homage, proceeding from a competitor for the Crown.
Antient memorandum concerning deposit of the appeal in the Treasury.
Appointment of Regents or Guardians.
Appeal on behalf of the Seven Earls in general, and of the Earl of Fife in particular.
Rights and privileges of the Seven Earls of Scotland.
Their appeal to the supremacy of Ed. I. and the English Crown.
Appeal on behalf of Donald Earl of Mar and of the men of Moray.

V. (continued)—Original appeal to Ed. I. on behalf of the Seven Earls, &c.

Damages and ravages committed in Moray by the Deputies of the Regents.

Appeal on behalf of Robert Bruce, Lord of Annandale, claiming the Crown as lawful and appointed heir.

Bruce appeals to the Crown of England, and inhibits the proceedings of the Regents until the judgment of the King of England can be obtained.

Deduction of the title of the competitors, as annexed to the appeal.

Alexander II. refers the question of the succession to the Great Council.

Judgment given by the Great Council in favour of the right of Robert Bruce, Lord of Annandale.

Judgment recorded on the rolls of the Treasury of Scotland.

Rights of the Count of Holland.

Letter addressed to the Council of Ed. I. by a claimant of the Scottish Crown.

The claimant urges that Richard I. could not legally release the Scottish homage.

Important historical facts proved by these documents.

Recognition of Bruce as heir by Alexander II. made in full Parliament, and enrolled in the Treasury of Scotland.

Replication or traverse of Balliol.

Recognition of Bruce by Alexander, not sufficiently noticed by historians.

Insufficient reasoning of Lord Hailes against the recognition.

Recognition, by whom made.

Authority of the Seven Earls.

Objections to the existence of such authority.—Answers to such objections.

Expressions in the original documents proving that the Seven Earls were a substantive body, distinct from the other members of the Earldom.

Franchises of the Seven Earls, not singular or unusual.

Seven lay Peers originally in France.

Seven Electors of the Empire.

Seven Barons of Champagne.

Burgh elections by leet juries or other select bodies.

Election "by compromise" in monastic bodies.

V. (continued)—Original appeal to Ed. I. on behalf of the Seven Earls, &c.

Election of the Latin Emperor of Constantinople by a select body.

Committee of Twelve, nominated in the Parliament at Scone, superseding the Seven Earls.

The more recent origin of the Imperial Electoral College does not prevent its being drawn into comparison.

Functions of the Seven Earls judicial rather than electoral. Other examples of similar rights.

Royal succession in the middle ages. The doctrine "le "mort saisit le vif" not then adopted.

An heir not allowed to assume the Royal authority until his title was recognized by a proper tribunal, his descent giving only an inchoate right.

Erroneous opinions entertained by the modern historians of Scotland.—The submission of the mixed subjects of the Scoto-Saxon Crown to Edward I. not enforced but given conscientiously.

Edward I. abuses his lawful right, and thus provokes resistance.

Bishop Fraser's letter not fairly represented by modern historians.

True explanation, afforded by the antient Scottish oath of fealty, of a dubious phrase in the Bishop's letter.

Bruce, and not Balliol, the first who sought Edward's intervention.

Speech ascribed to Bruce by Fordun: if really spoken, does not import any denial of the English supremacy.

Interposition of Edward I. not wanton or aggressive.

VI. l—xciv.

Proceedings before the Lord Paramount, commonly called the "Magnus Rotulus Scotiæ." Petitions and arguments of Bruce and of Balliol, &c. Order for emendation of the roll.

Synopsis of proceedings.

Great Roll of Scotland, how framed.

Notarial protocols.

Three copies of the Roll.

Notarial authentication of the Roll.—Great care taken by Edward I. to preserve evidence of his rights according to international law.

Amendment of the roll by Master John of Caen.

VI. (continued)—Proceedings before the Lord Paramount, &c.

The Notary complains that he has not been able to complete his instruments, in consequence of his having been brought into trouble by the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Original petitions of the competitors (now first published); their singularity and importance.

Ingenuity of their arguments and subtlety of their reasoning.

Arguments propounded by Bruce in a petition running parallel with that presented to the Auditors at Norham, 3d August, 19 Ed. I.

His replication to an argument drawn by Balliol from the descent of Earldoms.

Arguments of Bruce against the transmission of right through Margaret or Dervergoill, on the ground that no interest vested in them.

Bruce submits to Edward I. as his Lord and Emperor.

Bruce insists on the recognition made by Alexander II.

Bruce argues that no vested right could accrue to Dervergoill.

No right of eisnesce in Margaret, Balliol's grandmother.

Bruce argues that female succession can only be allowed from the necessity of the case, and when there is no male occupant.

Incapacity of females, how defined by the Civil Law.

No right can be acquired through a female who herself did not attain a vested right.

Rights of females divested by males.

Arguments deduced from the deposition of Childeric by Pope Zachary.

Argument that rights of inheritance vest in those who are nearest in blood at the time of the death of the person last seised.

Order of adjournment until 2 June 1292.

Edward I. directs careful search to be made for documents evidencing the rights of the parties.

Good faith of Edward I. forcibly exemplified by these directions.

Balliol pleads that Bruce was disqualified from suing, in consequence of the offences which he had committed against the peace.

Bruce alleges that he was the nearer heir at the time of the failure of issue.

VI. (continued)—Proceedings before the Lord Paramount, &c.

If Dervergoill had been alive, her rights would have been extinguished by the greater worthiness of the male blood in Bruce.

No law or usage in Scotland by which Bruce can be barred of his demand.

Kingdoms not partible.

Usages prevailing amongst subjects cannot bind the Crown.

Bruce appeals generally to the law of Royal succession in Scotland.

Answers put in by Balliol.

Balliol urges that according to the laws of Scotland Earldoms are not partible.

Acts of rebellion committed by Bruce in the time of the Lady of Scotland.

Balliol urges Edward not to submit himself to the Imperial law.

Ancient description, &c. of this document.

Further answer or replication of Balliol.

He maintains that the Scottish cases, cited by Bruce, make against him.

Particular case of Donald Bane and Duncan.

Right heir, restored by the lawful authority of William Rufus, the Lord Superior.

Balliol's deduction of lineal succession.

Balliol's account of the authority exercised by Rufus as Over-lord contrasted with the versions of modern histories.

Kingdom of Scotland, as Balliol urges, has, since the reign of Edgar, descended like an Earldom or a Barony.

Balliol argues against the applicability of the examples drawn from the Kingdom of Spain.

Balliol's refutation of Bruce's arguments against female rights.

VI. (continued)—Proceedings before the Lord Paramount, &c.

Rights of Bruce would have been forfeited if Balliol's line has committed felony; therefore he only takes in reversion after them.

King of England, bound to execute the law.

Seisin of the Kingdom of Scotland should be demanded by the same rules as a private inheritance.

Memorandum of the closing of the proceedings before the King, 25 June 1292.

Declaration by the Auditors, that the rights of the parties had been sufficiently discussed, 21 June 1292.

Principles of lineal succession favoured by Edward I. upon grounds of general policy.

MATERIALS OF THIS WORK.

Materials of this work.

I. The present publication is composed of the antient documents relating to the affairs of Scotland, preserved in the Treasury of the Exchequer: and which, omitted by Rymer in his Fœdera, were not employed by the subsequent Editors of that work. To these are added some few instruments which have already appeared in print, though not with diplomatic accuracy. Any endeavour to connect the facts evidenced by these materials into a continuous essay, would be to write the history of Scotland, or rather to re-write that history: for the information afforded by the instruments, now for the first time brought to light, supplies some most important chasms in the early annals of that antient member of the Anglo-Saxon Empire. But an official publication would be an unfitting medium for the introduction of discussions in which, with every attempt to adhere to proofs, much theory and latitude of opinion must necessarily be involved. I shall therefore confine myself to an abstract or summary of the materials now presented to the public: accompanied by some occasional remarks, enabling them to be better understood and appreciated by the inquirer.

JUDGMENT FOR THE RESTORATION OF THE SEISIN OF THE EARLDOM OF HUNTINGDON.

Judgment for the restoration of the seisin of the Earldom of Huntingdon.

II. The messengers or agents of Alexander II. pray that the Earldom of Huntingdon may be restored to him; "John "late Earl of Huntingdon," who held the same of the King of Scots, having, when he was under age, been in the wardship of the King of Scots, by reason of such Earldom.

Allen's Vindication, 18.

Lord the King shall have the custody of all his lands, as well of the enfeoffment of others as of his own enfeoffment; nevertheless as all the heirs of the Earl are of full age, our Lord the King renders to the King of Scots seisin of his fee, so however that justice be done to all who have a right therein, and this he does to him, the King of Scots, especially, because the heirs are of full age, and not by reason of the seisin, which he holds for nought. If the Earl ever was in the wardship of the King of Scots: this circumstance took place whilst the King was under age, and in the time of Hubert de Burgh, Earl of Kent, and Justiciar or Regent of England. In this restoration there is a saving to the King of four manors which were in the King's hands, and which the King of Scots holds of the King in capite.

Such seisin restored by special judgment, but not by reason of the alleged wardship.

The sub-infeudation took place when William the Lion first received the Earldom from Henry II. As soon as it was "restored" to him, he granted it to his brother David in the presence of the King.

THE HOMAGE OF ALEXANDER III.

The homage of Alex. III. 6 Ed. I. 1278.

III. Alexander III. performed his homage to Edward I. at Tewkesbury on Sunday next before the feast of St. Luke the Evangelist (16 Oct. 1278). The King not having his Council then with him, gives a further day to the King of Scots to perform the homage at London; declaring that such prorogation shall in nowise redound to his prejudice. This document was considered of much importance, and is particularly noticed in the inventory of the contents* of the Scottish Treasury, taken by the clerks of Alexander III. in 1282.† Without doubt, the delay in the

The account includes the money rents received from tenants, together with some profits of courts. The predial and other services are not rated. No money price could perhaps be affixed to them, but they added greatly to the value of the property.

Tenures various.

Every page in the annals of the agricultural population of the middle ages will be perused with interest by the historical enquirer. The present roll contains many curious details as to the tenants: the following classes are distinguished in Werke and Grendon;—Free tenants,—Tenants in serjeancy,—Tenants in drengage,—Tenants in bondage,—Cottiers,—and Tenants at will. (§ 2-8, 17-22.) In Penreth there were Tenants in burgage and Tenants in socage. (§ 9, 24.) In Scotteby we find a peculiar class, called Gresmen. (§ 25.) The demesne lands of Werke, with the capital messuage or manor house, were let on farm.

Rental of possessions held by Alex. III. in England.

(Illustrations, No. I. § 3-6.)

Tynedale, as we ascertain from the inquisition taken after the death of Alexander III., was held simply by homage; but for Penreth and other lands in Cumberland the King of Scots was bound to homage and fealty, and the render of a falcon annually on the feast of the Assumption, at the Castle of Carlisle. And John Balliol, who was found to be the next heir of the King of Scots, obtained in due course, restitution of seisin of the same.

29 Oct. 21 Ed. I.
2 Dec. 21 Ed. I.

The rental merely includes what the King of Scots possessed as a landlord: but he also held Tynedale as a regality, using therein all the rights of a Sovereign,—rights which without doubt he had equally exercised when the three lands of Cumbria, Northumbria, and Westmere were placed beneath his authority. This fact is evidenced by the highly curious roll of his Justices Itinerant, Thomas Randolf, Simon

King of Scots; his regalities in Tynedale.

It will appear from this roll*, that the King of Scots exercised the powers of jurisdiction within this district, exactly in the same manner as he did in Lothian, equally a portion of the Northumbrian Kingdom, and held under the same allegiance. And, had the northern counties continued in the possession of the Scottish Crown, they would, like the lands beyond the Tweed, have had the good or ill fortune of being considered as integral portions of the Scottish Kingdom.

Appointment of Regents or Guardians.

Let us now consider the instrument itself.—It is the protocol or minute of the proceedings instituted by the Seven Earls, appearing by their Procurators before William Fraser Bishop of St. Andrew's and John Comyn, acting as Guardians of the Kingdom of Scotland. According to Fordun, the Regency appointed in the Parliament or Great Council at Scone, 11 April 1286, originally consisted of six members, namely, William Fraser Bishop of St. Andrew's, Duncan Earl of Fife, and the Earl of Buchan, for the government of the dominions North of the Firths, and Wisheart Bishop of Glasgow, Sir John Comyn of Badenoch, and James the Stewart, for the country to the South of the Firths; these great divisions being treated and administered as two distinct Realms. Not long afterwards, the Earl of Buchan died, and Duncan Earl of Fife was slain by private enemies, leaving an infant heir. In the place of the Earl of Fife, Sir Alexander Moray was, if we trust the authority of Fordun, appointed one of the Regents. But in the treaty for the marriage of the Maid of Norway in 1290, he appears not in this character; he is there classed as a private baron, and we must therefore suppose that he was amoved. Dissensions are stated to have arisen between the Regents, and the two, noticed in the appeal, appear to have assumed the supreme authority, each in his original district of the domains appertaining to the Scottish Crown. 1288.

Under this power, what authority had the Regents assumed,—what acts had they performed?

Appeal on behalf of the Seven Earls in general, and of the son of the Earl of Fife in particular.

The instrument of appeal will inform us, being of the following tenor:—According to the antient laws and usages of the Kingdom of Scotland, and from the time whereof the memory of man was not to the contrary (p. 13-15, postea. No. IV. § 1.), it appertained to the rights and liberties of the Seven Earls of Scotland, and the "Communitas" of the same Realm, whensoever the Royal throne should become vacant "de facto et de jure," to constitute the King, and to place him in such Royal seat, and to confer upon him all the honours belonging to the government of the Kingdom of Scotland. And now, the throne being vacant by the death of Alexander III., and lest they, the Bishop of St. Andrew's and John Comyn, so acting as Regents of Scotland, together with the small portion of the "Communitas" of Scotland to them adhering, should of their own authority appoint any King for the government of the Kingdom, to the prejudice of the rights of the Seven Earls,—and of which Seven Earls, Duncan son of the late Earl of Fife is one;—and lest also John Balliol should bodily intermeddle in the Kingdom of Scotland or the government thereof: he the Procurator constituted by and acting in the name of the before-mentioned Seven Earls, and also of the Bishops, Abbots, Priors, Earls, Barons, and Freeholders of Scotland, and of the Communitas to them adhering, doth thereby appeal to the presence, or to the person, of Edward King

And the Procurator places the bodies of the Seven Earls of Scotland, and of all others before mentioned, and all their kith and kin, and all their property, lands, and gear, under the protection and defence of the King of England and of the English Crown.

Appeal on behalf of Donald Earl of Mar and of the men of Moray.

A second appeal from the acts and jurisdiction of the Regents, is made in the name and on the behalf of Donald Earl of Mar, one of the Seven Earls of Scotland: and also of all the freemen of Moray, their kith, kin, and friends. (p. 16, 17, postea. No. IV. § 2.)

Damages and ravages committed by the Deputies of the Regents in Moray.

It charges, that the Regents by their own arbitrary act, and without any authority in that behalf from the Nobles, Magnates, and "Communitas" of Scotland, had appointed Sub-Custodes or Deputies under them, which Deputies, entering the land of Moray,—a land immediately subject to the dominion of the King of Scotland,—ravaged and destroyed the same, herrying and burning the lands and dwellings and barns of the freemen of the King of Scots therein;—men, women, and children being by them cruelly slaughtered and slain. And on account and by reason of these injuries and damages, which the Bishop of St. Andrew's and John Comyn had so allowed to take place unchecked and unpunished, and in order to obtain recompense and amends from them and their adherents, the Procurator acting in the name of Donald Earl of Mar, and of the men of Moray, appeals as before to the presence of Edward King of England and to the Royal Crown of England. And, furthermore, the Procurator places the Earl of Mar, and all his kith, kin, and friends, and all his adherents, and also all the King of Scotland's freemen of Moray, and also all their lands, goods, and gear, wheresoever they may be found, under the special peace, protection, and defence of the King of England and his Royal Crown.

Appeal on behalf of the Seven Earls to Ed. I., &c.

A third and last appeal is made by the Procurator, in the name and on the behalf of Robert Bruce, Lord of Annandale, claiming the Crown as the lawful and appointed heir. (p. 17, 18, postea. No. IV. § 3.) It charges, that the Regents uniting with others of the Kingdom, as well in prejudice of the rights of Bruce as in violation of the rights and liberties of the Seven Earls of Scotland, which they have, and lawfully have had from the time whereof the memory of man runneth not to the contrary, of appointing the King and instituting him in the Royal seat, and in the Kingdom of Scotland, whensoever such Royal seat shall become vacant in fact and in law, had nevertheless intended and proposed to appoint John Balliol King of the Kingdom of Scotland, and to bestow upon him the rights and honours of the Kingdom.

Bruce appeals to the Crown of England, and inhibits the proceedings of the Regents until the judgment of the King of England can be obtained.

Therefore, by reason of such their default, and to obtain the enjoyment of his own rights, and also the rights of the Seven Earls of Scotland, he Robert Bruce, so appearing by his Procurator, appeals to the presence of Edward King of England and the Royal Crown of England. And this he does, lest they should in anywise proceed to make a King in Scotland until he, Robert Bruce, had fully received judgment concerning his right from Edward King of England; and which judgment he, Bruce, would in nowise receive from them. Therefore, again, and as before, he, Bruce, appeals to the King of England and his Royal Crown. And Bruce places himself specially, and the Seven Earls, and all his kith, kin, and friends adhering to him and to the Seven Earls, their bodies, all their lands and their possessions, their goods and their gear, under the special peace, protection, and defence of the King of England, and of his Royal Crown. This, it is repeated, he does lest the Regents should in anywise do further hurt or damage to him, Bruce, and to the Seven Earls of Scotland. And further, inasmuch as the Regents had in nowise made satisfaction or amends for the injuries done by them, their officers and deputies, from the time of the death of Alexander III. until the then present time, he, Robert Bruce, thereupon and again appeals to the King of England and to the Royal Crown of England.

Appeal on behalf of the Seven Earls to Ed. I., &c.

So far extends the appeal.—But thereunto is annexed a deduction of the rights under which Bruce claimed the Crown, and which statement was probably transmitted at the same time with the appeal, to the Council of the Lord Superior, whose protection he thus had sought.

This declaration or deduction of title sets forth the following facts. (p. 19, 21, postea. No. IV. § 4-6.) It states that William King of Scotland had one brother, David Earl of Huntingdon, who had issue four children, namely, one son (John Earl of Huntingdon) and three daughters: the son died without leaving any heir of his body; the eldest daughter (Margaret) was married to (Alan) the Lord of Galloway, by whom she had one daughter (Dervergoil). The record is here imperfect, but from the vestiges of words yet remaining it is evident that the descent of John Balliol was deduced from Dervergoil. The second daughter (Isabella) was married to the Lord Bruce, who begot upon her one son, to wit, Robert Bruce "who now is;" and the third daughter (Ada) was married to the Lord Hastings, from whom those of the line of Hastings are descended.

The question of the succession, referred to the Great Council, by Alexander II.

Alexander II. having advanced almost to the verge of senile age, and there being no expectation of his having an heir of his body, he assembled all the Nobles and Magnates of Scotland, the Bishops and other Clergy, and Laity, as many as could be brought together, at a certain day and place, in order to prevent the dissensions which would arise in the event of his death without issue. Unto this Parliament or Convention, he declared the state of his age, and that he had no issue of his body: but that his uncle David had three daughters, the first of whom had a daughter and the second a son; and he enjoined them all, as they were bound to him by their allegiance, fealty, and homage, that they would decide and adjudicate between the parties, — Which and whether of them should inherit the Crown, the daughter of the eldest sister or the son of the second sister?—And the Great Council being assembled together, they decreed and adjudged by all their own laws, and by the imperial* and other laws, that the son born of the second sister, should inherit in preference to the daughter born of the eldest sister. And all present, Clergy as well as Laity, unanimously declared the same as a true judgment to the King. Such judgment being given by the Great Council, and accepted by the Sovereign, he, King Alexander, took Robert Bruce, Lord of

Judgment given by the Great Council in favour of the right of Robert Bruce, Lord of Annandale.

* This admission of the civil law as an authority in Scotland at so early a period is very remarkable, and I doubt not but that it will excite attention amongst the enlightened jurists of the continent. More particularly if it should fall under the notice of Savigny, whose classical work,—I add with regret, and almost with shame,—has been so little appreciated in this country, that a translation carefully executed, and enriched with corrections and illustrations from the original author, was abandoned for want of support after the publication of the first volume.

Recorded on the rolls of the Treasury of Scotland.

And this act or deed was duly recorded upon the rolls of the Treasury of Scotland: but the Memorialists know not into whose hands it had then fallen; and the Memorialists thus conclude,—that the failure of issue of Alexander III. having taken place, he, Robert Bruce, was then in the same state as to his rights in the Kingdom of Scotland as he was when thus accepted by Alexander II. as the true and legitimate heir of the Kingdom.

Rights of the Earl of Holland.

A memorandum is added with respect to the rights of the Count of Holland. It is known or recognized by the Seniors* of the Kingdom of Scotland, that the whole County or Earldom of Ross had been granted in marriage to the sister of King William, from whom he is descended: and that the same Earldom had been unjustly withdrawn from the said Count of Holland. Furthermore, it is known or recognized in like manner, that, failing the heirs of David Earl of Huntingdon, the Count of Holland is the right heir, and the nearest to the succession of the Kingdom of Scotland, by reason of his descent from the sister of King William.

Accompanying the appeal, is a letter in the French language, evidently proceeding from a Claimant to the Scottish Crown.—I have heard,—says the Writer,—from my father, and from old men of the time of King David, that there was war between the King of England and King David. And in those days was Northumberland lost. And a peace was made between the Kings of England and Scotland upon condition, that if the King of Scotland should ever in anywise refuse obedience to the King of England or to his Crown, that then the Seven Earls of Scotland — les Seet Countes de Escoce — should be bound by oath to redress the same.* Afterwards came King Richard and sold the homage of the King of Scotland. But this sale can be nothing worth: for, well can the King of England, he who is so wise, and his counsel also, consider and understand whether the rights of the Crown can be thus dismembered. And, inasmuch as the regality ought to be kept entire,—the writer continues,—let the King know by Elias de Hauville*, that whenever he will make his demand, I will obey him, and help him by myself, and with all my friends and lineage. The writer concludes by praying grace or favour concerning his right; a prayer connected, as far as can be collected from the imperfect state of the document, with a promise or engagement to obtain evidence from the Antients of the land concerning the King's interests, probably as to his superiority over Scotland.

Important historical facts proved by these documents.

The historical facts which these documents profess to establish are the following: I. That in the lifetime of Alexander II. the right of the elder Bruce being investigated before the Scottish legislature, received what we should now term a parliamentary recognition, followed by a parliamentary settlement. II. That there existed in the antient Kingdom of Scotland a known and established constitutional body, denominated, the Seven Earls of Scotland, possessing privileges of singular importance as a distinct Estate of the Realm, severed equally from the other Earls and from the body of the Baronage. III. That upon the death of the Maid of Norway, William Fraser, Bishop of St. Andrew's, and John Comyn, endeavoured to bestow the Crown upon Balliol, violating the settlement made upon Bruce and the constitutional franchises of the Seven Earls and of the Communitas of Scotland. And that, thereupon, Bruce and the Seven Earls, appealed from such attempt and decision to the authority of the King of England, to whose judgment they submitted, not as an arbitrator selected to determine a contested question, but, as a lawful Superior, whose protection and defence they implored.

Appeal on behalf of the Seven Earls to Ed. I., &c.

Upon the first point,—the recognition of Bruce,—the scanty chronicles of Scotland are wholly silent: but the right thus acquired was strongly urged by Bruce, in his petition presented to the Arbitrators at Norham, and also in another in the French or Romance language, now first published, and which was also propounded during the proceedings in the court of the Sovereign Superior.

p. 29, postea. No. VII. § 6, 7.

The Norham petition is set out upon the Great Roll of Scotland, as well as in the Notarial Protocol from which this portion of the Great Roll is framed. It agrees in substance with the appeal, stating briefly that King Alexander, despairing of any issue of his body, acknowledged and designated Robert Bruce, in such event, to be his lawful heir. Alexander made this recognition by the assent of the "probi "homines" of the Kingdom, and accepted Bruce as his heir before them: many of whom were yet alive, and could bear testimony of the fact.*

The French or Romance petition, in which Sir Robert Bruce prays for right from Edward I. as his Sovereign Lord and Emperor (p. 29, postea. § 7.), affords an important additional fact, besides furnishing a contemporaneous exposition of the terms and phrases employed in those documents which are written in the Latin language.

Recognition of Bruce made by Alexander II. in full Parliament, and enrolled in the Treasury of Scotland.

Bruce states, that when Alexander II. proceeded in war against the Islands, he granted and ordained, as he who was best informed concerning his own blood or family, and by assent of the Bishops and Earls, and of his Baronage, that, in the event of his dying without an heir of his body, Sir Robert Bruce, as the nearest of his blood, should be held his heir in the Kingdom of Scotland: and a writing was made accordingly, and sealed with the seals of the King, the Bishops, and the other great Lords, and deposited in the Treasury. And of this he prays that enquiry may be made by the Baronage of the land, for, of those who know the fact, many are now living. (p. 29, postea. § 7.)*

Replication or traverse of Balliol.

The traverse or replication made by Balliol, as entered upon the roll of Norham, and also upon the notarial protocol, seems to show that the petition of Bruce there presented contained some further averments: for, in reciting this instrument, Balliol, after noticing that Bruce had alleged that Alexander II. made the recognition before his Barons, proceeds to add, that Bruce also stated that Alexander III. made the same recognition, with the knowledge of Dervergoil, the mother of John Balliol, who did not contradict the guage, upon the plan adopted by Buchon in his edition of Froissart: — "Sir Robert de Brus prie nôtre Seigneur "le Roi qu'il veuille entendre les raisons qu' il a mis pour "lui, et les exemples de ce Royaume et des autres pour "son droit affermir. Et pour ce que les Rois sont sur les "lois, et droit de Royaume ne doit être jugé par commune "loi, ni par lois des sujets, prie a nôtre Seigneur le Roi "comme son Souverain Seigneur et son Empereur qu' "il veuille son droit trier et juger selon loi royale, par "quelle Rois regnent, et doivent regner. same. Balliol then proceeds to argue, — cautiously adopting the forms of pleading and technical language of the English common law,—that such recognition cannot avail, inasmuch as Bruce acknowledges that Alexander II. died seised of the Kingdom in his demesne of fee and right, and that from him, the right descended to one Alexander as his son and heir, who in like manner died seised thereof; and therefore, by his own acknowledgment, he shows that Alexander II. did not die without heirs of his body. And the right of his Kingdom was transmitted by his death to his heir, and thus by the recognition of Alexander II. (if it was made) no right could be acquired. The original replication of Balliol to the first petition of Bruce (p. 42, postea. No. XIII. § 5.) is extant; it is much damaged, but we can collect that in its general import, the argument was pursued in the same manner as in the replication recorded on the Norham roll.

Appeal on behalf of the Seven Earls to Ed. I., &c.

It is somewhat remarkable that the Parliamentary recognition of the rights of Bruce, should have been so generally forgotten by those who have discussed the questions arising out of Scottish history. Brady, and Tyrrel, and Hume, in the last generation, and our learned and diligent contemporaries Turner and Lingard, pass over the allegation made by Bruce in total silence.—Carte considers the assertion as "a mere pretence."—Mr. Fraser Tytler, in his elaborate and able history of Scotland, notices the assertion, but without any comment; and the only writer who examines the position taken by Bruce is Lord Hailes, who labours to rebut the claim by the following reasoning.—"The argument of Bruce is confidently "urged and feebly opposed. Balliol's "counsel ought to have answered; first, "the opinion of Alexander II., supposing "it to have been given, cannot vary the "rules of succession. The proof offered "is inadmissible. The constitution of "Scotland, and the fate of its competitors, "must not depend upon the testimony "of witnesses concerning words cursorily "heard more than half a century ago. "Alexander II. renders it incredible that "he ever uttered the words ascribed to "him by Bruce, and which he pretends to "prove by the evidence of witnesses, cer-"tainly superannuated, and probably not "impartial."

Appeal on behalf of the Seven Earls to Ed. I., &c.

Thus far Lord Hailes; but I cannot find any sufficient reason for the manner in which he discredits, or attempts to discredit, the allegations of Bruce: and we may observe that all the conditions which he requires for the legal validity of the recognition were strictly fulfilled. The recognition of Bruce was not the vague "opi-"nion" of the King, but the deliberate judgment of a competent Tribunal. The "testimony" of the witnesses was not propounded as a loose declaration of certain aged men, but as the verdict which individuals, well informed of the fact, would give when empannelled as the jury by whom the truth was to be enquired. And it is most singular that this learned writer, conversant as he certainly was with the language of antient documents, should have failed to notice that the term "probi ho-"mines" was employed technically, whilst the name "Barons," given to the same individuals in the replication of Balliol, would sufficiently lead to the inference that the declaration was made in the Great Council: a fact which, however, is now put out of doubt by the more clear and precise language of the instrument of appeal.

Insufficient reasoning of Lord Hailes against the recognition.

It is not unimportant to observe, that whilst, as in England, the Scottish Treasury was the repository for the records of the Crown, the practice of making regular enrolments had been equally established in the Northern Realm.

Recognition, in whom made.

The birth of Alexander III. took place on the 4th September 1241, his father, Alexander II., being then in his forty-fourth year.* The declaration must have been, of course, made before there could be any probability of that event, and the period to which it must be assigned must be found between the 4th March 1238, when Queen Joan died, and the 15th May 1239, when Alexander II. married his second wife Mary de Coucy. The expedition to the Isles is not noticed in the existing histories, and it may be said that the age of Alexander II., at the latest period when the declaration can have been made, was not such as to warrant its tenor. But, besides the consideration that such expressions are not to be construed strictly, it is very probable that the phrase was employed as a delicate mode of indicating some bodily infirmity of the King.

Appeal on behalf of the Seven Earls to Ed. I., &c.

Let us now consider the second point, namely, the authority possessed by the Seven Earls of Scotland, or rather their existence as a constitutional body in the State; a position upon which, individuals most highly distinguished for their historical knowledge, and to whom the documents were submitted previously to their publication, entertain, as appears to me, an ungrounded degree of scepticism. Antient Albania was divided into seven Provinces or Kingdoms.* The seven "Comites" appear in the train of the Pictish King. A portion of the Earldom, whom it is scarcely possible to consider as being other than the Seven Earls, endeavoured to execute judgment of forefaulter against Malcolm IV., and to place another Sovereign on the throne. And the circumstance, or rather the accident, that the authority of the "Seven Earls" is not more distinctly mentioned in the scanty memorials of Scottish history amounts absolutely to nothing. In the eighteen massy folios of the collection of the historians of the Gauls, the first notice which we meet with concerning the Twelve Peers of France, is found in the pages of Matthew Paris, the Monk of St. Alban's, and to him the French antiquaries must appeal as the earliest voucher for their national tribunal.

Authority of the Seven Earls.

* The discovery of the connexion between the Seven Earls of Scotland and the earlier state of the kingdom is due to a very able writer, whose work has appeared whilst these sheets are passing through the press. (The Highlanders of Scotland, by W. F. Skene, Esq., Vol. i.—App.) Mr. Skene, it should be observed, at the time he wrote his interesting essay, had only seen an abstract of the document, communicated to the Society of Antiquaries.

Objections to the existence of such authority.—Answers to such objections.

It is urged that the Seven Earls of Scotland should be included in the same category as the Seven Champions of Christendom. Following the same mode of reasoning we might contend that the Twelve Peers of Philip Augustus had no real existence, because the romance commemorates the achievements of Charlemagne's Doze Peers. That the partiality for particular mystical numbers, as well as the traditionary institutions of antiquity, did frequently influence the laws and forms of government prevailing in the middle ages, is a fact which cannot be doubted. I admit the fact to its fullest extent;—but there is a wide difference between admitting the influence of fables and traditions upon mediæval institutions, and rejecting the historical accounts of mediæval institutions as fabulous and traditionary, in consequence of such admixture.—Because the legend of Saint George and his Dragon is apocryphal, is the foundation of the order of the Garter by Edward III. to be denied?

The Earls who in 1290 were parties to the treaty for the marriage of the Maid of Norway, are Malise, of Strathern; Patrick, of Dunbar or of the March; John Comyn, of Buchan; Donald, of Mar; Gilbert de Umframvill, of Angus; John, of Athol; Walter, of Menteith; Robert Bruce, of Carrick; William, of Ross; Malcolm, of Lennox; William, of Sutherland; and John, of Caithness; being twelve in number.* Five of the Earls thus enumerated sition, that the Seven Earls of Scotland were the majority of the body of the Earldom, by whom the right of appointing the King was claimed: the plain text, however, opposes the strongest obstacles to such a theory. Can any one hesitate to admit that, according to the ordinary construction of language, phrases like the following, — "Pees fust fait entre le "Roi d'Engleterre et le Roi d'Escosse, tele "si le Roi d'Escosse venist jamais encoun-"tre le Roi d'Engleterre de nule deso-"beisaunce ou a cuntre sa Corone qe les "Seet Countes de Escoce feussent tenuz de "serment;" (p. 22, postea.) — "Libertates "Septem Comitum Regni Scotiæ et Com-"munitatis Regni;" (p. 14, postea. § 1.) — "Nomine Septem Comitum, Episcoporum, "Abbatum, Priorum, Comitum, Baronum, et "libere tenentium Scotiæ, et Communitatis "ejusdem eis adherentis, ad Dominum Ed-"wardum Dei Gratia Regem Angliæ hiis "scriptis appello" (p. 15, postea. § 1.), as well as the whole import and tenor of the instruments, point out the Seven Earls as a distinct body, severed from the rest of the Estates of the Kingdom.

particular instrument, nor by the general tenor of mediæval history. Many examples may be found of the existence of similar select bodies: possessing high constitutional privileges; and distinguished from their compeers by powers, sometimes grounded upon usage and custom, and sometimes resulting from a special enactment, compact, or law.

Seven lay Peers originally in France.

Such were the Twelve Peers of France: and it is the opinion of the French antiquaries and historians, that these consisted originally only of seven laymen: but that upon the County of Paris being united to the Crown in the person of Hugh Capet, six ecclesiastical Peers were afterwards added to the six remaining laymen.

Seven Electors of the Empire.

Such also were the Seven Electors of the Empire, upon whom the nomination of the Chief of Western Christendom belonged.

Seven Barons of Champagne.

Such were the Seven Barons of Champagne, who alone had entry into the States of the County, whilst all others of their rank were excluded.

With reference to elective rights, the usage of exercising them by means of select bodies, either the real or the virtual representatives of a larger constituency, was, if not universal, of very extensive application. In England, it is difficult to point out the instances in which the municipal election was not made by a leet jury, or by some select body of an analogous nature: and there was a general tendency to this system in cases where the community wished to ensure the choice of the best man by those best qualified to judge, in place of leaving the fate of the election, to the brigues and intrigues, or the tumults and factions of a larger assembly.

Burgh elections by leet juries or other select bodies.

In Monastic establishments, this mode of election, effected by delegating the power to a smaller body, usually twelve in number, was termed "election by compromise," and was fully recognized by the canon law.

Election "by compromise" in monastic bodies.

1204. Of such electoral colleges in civil affairs we have many examples, but none more remarkable than that occurring in the case of the first of the Latin Emperors of the Eastern Empire. The Host of the Crusaders nominated twelve electors, and by them Baldwin, Count of Flanders, was chosen to be the Emperor.

Election of the Latin Emperor of Constantinople by a select body.

All these analogies bear strongly on the Seven Earls of Scotland, by showing that such an institution was neither an anomaly nor an innovation in the policy of the age.

Committee of Twelve nominated in the Parliament at Scone, superseding the Seven Earls.

It may be noticed that the Scots themselves, under Wallace, re-organized a body whom the English mediæval chroniclers compare to the Twelve Peers of France, but of whom, except in their narratives, no other memorials are preserved.* 1295.

The more recent origin of the Imperial Electoral College does not prevent its being drawn into comparison.

The Seven Earls must have lost their exclusive rights by this new form of government,—an alteration possibly effected at the instigation of the Clergy: but the creation of such a board shows that the principle of confiding the powers of government to select bodies was familiar to the Scots. It may be, perhaps, remarked, or objected, that any inference drawn from the constitution of the Empire is negatived by the fact, that the Electoral College can

* "1295. scarcely be said to have been formed when the judgment of the Seven Earls was given. And, that the rights of the Germanic Electors were nothing more than a successful assumption of the privileges which had previously belonged to the whole body of the Diet. Therefore it may be argued that the Seven Earls had usurped the franchises attributed to them by some process equally tacit and expeditious. This may very possibly have been the case, but such a transfer of authority is only the history of institutions and constitutions in the middle ages, or rather in all ages: — innovations or usurpations unresisted or overcoming resistance; — insulated acts conglomerating into usages; — usages becoming law.

Appeal on behalf of the Seven Earls to Ed. I., &c.

I do not, however, suppose that the Seven Earls and the Communitas ever claimed an electoral right, in the ordinary sense of the term, or that the republican theories of Buchanan derive any support from this antient custom of the Scottish monarchy.— The right of "making the King," of "con- "stituting him in the Royal seat," and conferring upon him the honours appertaining to the government of the land, when "such Royal seat became vacant in fact "and in law," should be considered, not as an elective, but as a judicial right, to be called into exercise whenever required by the institutions of the monarchy. The throne of Norway, when it became vacant, was adjudged to the rightful occupant by the decision of a select nembda: and the heir could not ascend the throne of the feudal kingdom of Jerusalem until his title had been examined and discussed before a competent tribunal.*

Royal succession in the middle ages. The doctrine le mort saisit le vif not recognized.

The principle which governed these and similar proceedings was intelligible and consistent. According to the earlier laws of succession throughout Europe, the heir, whether lineal or collateral, possessed only an inchoate right to the throne, — a right which required recognition or confirmation by some competent authority to perfect its validity. The coronation of the son in the lifetime of his father, by assent of a Witenagemot, a Diet, or a Great Council, was such an act. If Henry II. had died in the lifetime of his ill-fated son, the younger Henry, and after the coronation of the latter,

* I have fully discussed those interesting practices of antient policy elsewhere.—Essay on the Gothic Laws of Spain, (Ed. Rev., Vol. xxx. p. 115.)—Essay on the Courts of the English Common Law, (Ed. Rev., Vol. xxxvi. p. 287.) — Rotuli Curiæ Regis, Introduction, p. lxxxviii. xcvii.

the throne would have been filled both in fact and in law: and this, without doubt, was the reason why Henry II. was so anxious that the ceremony should be performed. But Richard Cœur de Lion had been neither crowned nor recognized by his father as his heir. Consequently, upon the death of Henry II., the throne was vacant until Richard had been duly invested with the Royal authority. In like manner the throne became vacant upon the death of Richard: and there was no King in England until John received the Crown from the Metropolitan of all Britain.*

recognized by a proper tribunal, his descent giving only an inchoate right.

Amongst the Scoto-Pictish monarchs, the canons of succession in the Royal family were extremely vague and undetermined: And although the monarchy became more settled under the Scoto-Saxon line, still every demise would, as far as we can judge of the policy of such communities, occasion a vacancy of the throne, in the strictest sense of the term. But this interregnum would in no wise entitle the Seven Earls to select an individual not belonging to the antient Royal line: they were to declare the King's rights, but not to make a King. They were not to select between candidates: but to sit in judgment upon the claims of competitors who sought to establish their rights according to law.

Appeal to the authority of Edward I.

We now come to the third point, the appeal to the authority of Edward I. The Scottish writers upon Scottish history, warmed by the courage and heroism of Bruce and Wallace, as represented in the poetry and popular legends and traditions of their country, have characterized the repeated submissions to the English King as acts of disgrace, and stains upon the national honour. But the justice of the cause must be judged according to the conscience of the parties; and if the Prelates, the Peers, the Knights, the Freeholders, and the Burgesses of Scotland believed that Edward was their Over-Lord, it is not their obedience, but their withdrawing of it, which should be censured by posterity. Outward acts must be always received as the testimony of inward sentiments: and if men, without compulsion, continue and persevere in a series of consistent acts, testifying sentiments which they inwardly repudiate, the whole basis of the law of nations is destroyed.

Erroneous opinions entertained by the modern historians of Scotland.—The first submission of the mixed subjects of the Scoto-Saxon Crown (erroneously called Scottish nobles, &c. in modern language) not enforced, but given conscientiously.

There is not, however, any reason for believing that until the era of Wallace, there was any insincerity on the part of the noble Normans, the stalwart Flemings, the sturdy Northumbrian Angles, and the aboriginal Britons of Strath Clyde and Reged, whom we erroneously designate as Scots,—in admitting the legal supremacy of the English Crown, until the attempts made by Edward I. to extend the incidents of that supremacy beyond their legal bounds, provoked a resistance, not undeservedly earned, and deserved by such abuse. Then, flaws were found in his title, and the Under-King of the Scots, as the Anglo-Saxons styled him, and his subjects were induced to deny the supremacy thitherto felt and owned by them, and which Bruce and Balliol began by acknowledging with equal alacrity.

Appeal on behalf of the Seven Earls to Ed. I., &c.

Edward I. abuses his lawful right, and thus provokes resistance.

There is nothing in the conduct of either of these competitors or of their adherents contradicting this assumption. If both Bruce and Balliol vied with each other, as they certainly did, in submission, and possibly in other offers to Edward I., we are not hence to suppose that they thereby confessed that they were purchasing the judgment of an unauthorized tribunal.

Appeal on behalf of the Seven Earls to Ed. I., &c.

There was great doubt as to the law of succession: and amidst all the turbulence of party and the violence of a rude age, we may well suppose that many a subject of the Scoto-Saxon Crown might be perplexed in determining between the pretensions of the competitors for the Royal seat of Kenneth Macalpine.* The claimants themselves might respectively feel the difficulty, and endeavour to turn the doubtful scale. The solicitation of a judge may throw discredit upon the moral character of the suitor, but it does not annul any real right which he may possess: and the abuse of power in the judge, does not discredit the fact of his possessing a rightful authority, which he has misapplied.

Appeal on behalf of the Seven Earls to Ed. I., &c.

Great stress has been laid upon what has been termed "the base proposal" of the Bishop of Saint Andrew's. It may have been injudicious and time-serving: we may condemn this inconvenient interposition of a partizan. Yet at the same time nothing can be extracted from the Bishop's letter contradictory of the real facts of the case:—the anticipation, on the part of the writer, that a claim, founded upon law, but which was threatened by the power of an opponent, might thereafter be brought before the tribunal of a lawful superior, whose intervention would spare the country from bloodshed and civil war.

Bishop Fraser's letter not fairly represented by modern historians.

The complexion of the letter has, indeed, been overlooked by those who impugn the good faith of the English King. Bishop Fraser was in the most complete uncertainty respecting the fate of the Maid of Norway. Whether Margaret was living or dead, no one could tell. He was endeavouring, as he informs Edward I., to ascertain the truth of the sinister reports. But should, in this state of uncertainty, an individual of great power and influence in the country approach your presence,—one who may enable you to preserve your rights, whatever the event may be,—then give him a favourable hearing. This is the real effect of the Bishop's advice, and the most dubious phrase which he employs does not go beyond advising Edward, not to afford his aid to a Vassal, unless that Vassal was one who would adhere to the obligation of keeping the counsel of his superior according to the feudal law.*

* The following extracts will best enable the reader to judge of the mode in which the transaction should be viewed:—

"Set insonuit in populo dolorosus rumor, quod dicta "Domina nostra debuit esse mortua; propter quod regnum "Scotiæ est turbatum, et communitas disperata.

But the inference deduced from the letter, that the interference of Edward was first prompted by Balliol, must now entirely

There is little difficulty in affixing an intelligible meaning to the concluding phrase, however confused its expression may be, if we take it in connection with the obligation of keeping counsel or giving counsel, which, from the earliest period, formed one of the most important portions of the obligations entered into between the vassal and the superior. I have collected some of the more prominent forms elsewhere. (Rise and Progress of the English Commonwealth, Vol. ii. p. 406, 407.)—And referring to those examples, it may be observed, that in the antient oath of fealty, as used in Scotland, the obligation of counselling or advising, was most particularly stringent: " I become " your man, my liege King, in land, lich, life, and lim, " warldly honour, homage, fealty, and lawty, against all that " live and die; your counseill concealand that ye schaw " me, the best counsell schawand gif ye charge me." The Bishop therefore only advises Edward to take good heed, that his future vassal will act up to the true intent and spirit of his bond.

fall to the ground. It was not Balliol, but Bruce, Lord of Annandale, who was the first to appeal to the judgment seat of the Over-Lord, and to acknowledge the supremacy of the English Crown. The fact is evidenced by records which cannot be rejected by critical scepticism,—which cannot be explained away by critical ingenuity,—nor does the speech ascribed to Bruce by Fordun, in any wise alter the inferences which are to be drawn from the document.

Speech ascribed to Bruce by Fordun: if really spoken, does not import any denial of the English supremacy.

Edward is said to have asked Bruce the competitor whether, if he, Edward, made him King, he, Bruce, would hold the Kingdom of Scotland of him in capite, and Bruce is said to have answered, that if he could obtain the Kingdom by way of law and the verdict of a jury, well and good;—"but otherwise I will never "purchase the Kingdom by reducing it "into servitude."* Bruce might well perceive, that the acknowledgment of holding the Kingdom in capite, put upon the record of an English Court of justice, in the technical language of the English law, would let in all the incidents already connected with the military tenures of Anglo-Norman England, or which the skill of the English lawyers might thereafter engraft upon that jurisprudence. But Bruce claimed according to rights which had arisen from an older policy. He was the Lænsman of the Monarch who represented the Bretwald, the Emperor or Basileus of Albion, or of Britain, and not the Vassal of the King of England and Duke of Normandy. If he came in by way of law, the obligations were neither altered nor lessened. As they were, so would they continue. Bruce relied upon the law, and by the law he would abide. And the declaration made by Edward I. upon the opening of the proceedings at Norham, that it was not his intention to gain unduly upon any one, or diminish or affect the liberties of the Kingdom of Scotland, but that he would administer impartial justice to all, as the Over-Lord of the Realm, was in perfect conformity to the rights under which he could alone legally claim.

Magn. Rot. Scot. Rymer, i. 762.

Interposition of Edward I. not wanton or aggressive.

But, to return to the main point, we have now full evidence that the interposition of Edward I. was neither wanton nor aggressive, and little deserving of the terms by which it has been described.

Kings have hard measure meted out to them by historians. Let the English Monarch be tried by the test and example of an English gentleman.—If, upon the death of the copyhold Tenant, all the persons claiming the right of admission, though under different and conflicting titles, unite in applying to the Lord of the Manor for a new grant, will it be easy for him to doubt but that he is the lawful owner of the domain?

PROCEEDINGS BEFORE THE LORD PARAMOUNT, COMMONLY CALLED THE "MAGNUS ROTULUS SCOTIÆ." PETITIONS AND ARGUMENTS OF BRUCE AND OF BALLIOL, &c. ORDER FOR EMENDATION OF THE ROLL.

Proceedings before the Lord Paramount, &c.

Proceedings before the Lord Paramount, &c.

Balliol, and his confirmation of all the preceding transactions, such confirmation being sealed by him at Newcastle upon Tyne, 2 January 1293, are recorded upon a roll, generally quoted as "the Great "Roll of Scotland."

It is not probable that this volume will fall into the hands of any reader ignorant of the main facts of the case: but the following tabular synopsis may not be without its use in enabling him to follow the order of the proceedings*: —

Synopsis of proceedings.

19Ed.I.1291. 10 May.—Meeting or Convention, at Norham.

11 May.—Proceedings adjourned for three weeks from the 10th.

2 June.—Bruce, Balliol, and the other Competitors, submit to the authority of Edward I.

3 June.—Full submission to the supremacy of the Crown of England. The King declares his intention of proceeding with the cause.

5 June.—Court of Auditors appointed.

6 June.—Day appointed by the King for the trial of the cause; viz. 2d August then next.

* When not otherwise expressed, the quotations are from the Great Roll.

1291. Proceedings before the Lord Paramount, &c.

11 June.—Chancellor of Scotland appointed, &c.

12 June.—Chancellor sworn, &c.

13 June.—Keepers of Scotland sworn, and reference again made to the adjournment for the 2d August, &c.

3 August.—Berwick, on Friday next after the Feast of St. Peter ad Vincula.—Petitions presented by the Count of Holland, the Earl of March, William de Vescy, William de Ros, Robert de Pinkeney, Nicholaus de Soules, Patrick Galythly, Roger de Mandeville, John Comyn of Badenagh, John de Hastings, John Balliol, and Robert Bruce, Lord of Annandale; all deducing their several descents and pedigrees.

12 August.—A day is given to the parties by the King in his next Parliament; viz. on the Morrow of the Holy Trinity, 2 June 1292.* (No. X. p. 35, postea.)

20Ed.I.1292. 2 June.—At Berwick.—Petitions read, and Auditors charged to determine the rights as between Bruce and Balliol. Day given to the parties in the King's next Parliament; viz. in sixteen days of St. Michael, 14 Oct., being the Morrow of the Translation of the Confessor.

* On the roll this adjournment is given as part of the proceedings of the 3d August. Trinity Sunday fell on the 1st June. The meeting is misdated in Rymer (i. p. 777.) as being held on the 1st June. The division into paragraphs and the rubrics as they appear in Rymer are not found upon the original roll.

1292. 18 June.—Wednesday next after the Feast of St. Botolph, at Berwick.—Bruce replies to the exceptions taken by Balliol.

Proceedings before the Lord Paramount, &c.

19 June.—Thursday next after the Feast of St. Botolph.—Balliol delivers his last objections. (No. XVII. p. 52, postea.)

21 June.—Saturday next before the Nativity of St. John the Baptist, at Berwick.—Declaration under the seals of the Auditors that the King might proceed to judgment. (No. XVIII. p. 52-55, postea.)

25 June.—Wednesday next after the Feast of St. John the Baptist, at Berwick.—Bruce and Balliol declare that they have nothing more to say, unless the King shall so direct. (p. 50-51, postea. § 11.)

14 Oct.—At Berwick.—The King demands of the Auditors to declare by what laws the question should be decided. Bruce pleads that the right must be tried by the law of nations: Balliol, by the law of ordinary succession. Opinion given by the Auditors. Parties adjourned to Thursday next after the Feast of All Saints.

6 Nov.—At Berwick.—Pleadings respecting the partibility of the Kingdom. Day given to the parties on Monday next after the Feast of St. Martin.

17 Nov.—At Berwick.—Judgment given that Balliol shall recover the Kingdom of Scotland.

Great Roll of Scotland, how framed.

The entries upon this Roll are of two classes: — Original documents textually recorded or enrolled, and Abridgments of the notarial Protocols which were made up, in due and authentic form, from time to time, pending the proceedings. The Protocols also contain recitals of various instruments proffered or propounded by the competitors. Three of the original Protocols, which are added hereto (p. iv–xvii. postea. Illustrations, Nos. II. III. IV.), may be compared with the Great Roll as published in the Fœdera, and it may thereby be seen what abbreviations they have sustained. Of the Roll two copies,—an original and a duplicate,—are still extant in this Treasury*: a third copy was deposited in the Wardrobe. The roll exhibits extraordinary care in the manner in which it is made up, being written throughout in a very bold and legible character, by the own proper hand of John of Caen or de Cadomo, sometimes calling himself, according to the style of the Papal Chancery, Johannes Erturi [i. e. filius Erturi vel Arthuri] de Cadomo, who subscribes his "sign" or paraphe, and which "sign" is also affixed athwart the junctions of each of the membranes of which the Roll is composed. This last authentication is added for the same reason that a testator now adds his signature at the foot of each sheet of a will. And the whole document was drawn up under the inspection of Master Henry de Newerk and of Sir Roger Brabazon, thereunto specially assigned by the King.

Notarial authentication of the Roll.—Great care taken by Edward I. to preserve evidence of his rights according to international law.

The authentication of the proceedings by notarial authority, a course adopted by Edward I. throughout the business, was intended to render them public evidence, according to the civil and canon law: and it displays in a forcible manner the pacific intentions of Edward I. He foresaw the possibility of the contravention of these solemn engagements. Therefore he wished to render the testimony of his rights conformable to the international laws of Christendom: that he might be able to defend himself by the pen as well as by the sword.

Amendment of the Roll by Master John of Caen.

These particulars concerning the formation or making up of the Roll are collected from a bill or memorandum presented to Edward I. by the before-mentioned Master John the Notary. He states that, notwithstanding the care and pains thus bestowed, there was an omission of a most material article, and relating to the most important point of the suit, that is to say, concerning the place where the judgment was given, —"ce est a savoir en le plus fort point de "tout le proces, comme en le lieu du juge-"ment rendu;"—but a correction of this mistake had now been agreed upon by the advice of Sir Roger and others, upon the showing of Master John. And, inasmuch as the alteration can only be made by his own hand, he prays that it may be effected whilst he is yet able to do what is required.

p. 287, postea. No. CXL. § 1.

The Notary complains that he has not been able to complete his instruments, in consequence of his having been brought into trouble by the Archbishop of Canterbury.

Master John prefers a further petition at the same time to the King (p. 299, postea. No. CXL. § 2.) that he has by him many notes and remembrances of important matters concerning Scotland, which cannot be completed by any one but by himself. But, during the last six years he has been so hindered and riotted at law by the Archbishop of Canterbury, that he has not been able to attend to the same, and he prays that the King may give order thereupon. The concluding portion of this petition rather tends to the supposition, that Master John thought he had a better chance of succeeding in defeating the Archbishop by the King's intervention, than by the justice of his own cause.

Proceedings before the Lord Paramount, &c.

The Treasury still possesses all the notarial protocols out of which the Great Roll is framed: and also some portions of the original petitions of the Competitors, being either instruments presented to the Auditors or concurrent therewith. These documents, which are in the French language, are in the last stage of decay, so that many portions fell into dust whilst they were under transcription. Fragments as they are, they possess great interest and curiosity; they present us both with the language and the sentiments of the parties in a form much more satisfactory than upon the Great Roll. For in the latter, being rendered into Latin, we have only such an abstract as the Notary thought expedient to insert; and I have already shown (p. xxiii. antea.) how material are the explanation and corrections which they afford.

Original Petitions of the Competitors now first published. Their singularity and importance.

Ingenuity of those arguments and subtlety of their reasoning.

Nor can the historical Enquirer do otherwise than consider the ingenuity of the arguments, the subtlety and precision of reasoning, and the research and labour which they exhibit, as being highly worthy of attention. These technicalities are not phrases of course, and empty forms. On the contrary, we must view the elaborate mootings of the Competitors, as so many testimonies of their confidence in the rectitude of the Tribunal before which they were pleading. If any one amongst them did rely upon the secret favour of the Judge, or built his hopes upon the influence of the Lord Paramount in swaying the opinions of the judicature, he must have felt that the favour could not be shown, nor the influence exerted, unless there was such a show of right to support his claim as could stand the test of enquiry. And, dull and tedious as these documents may appear, they hence elucidate the character of the transactions as truly as the most spirited narrative or lively description of the contest in which the Parties, the Nations, and the Kingdoms became engaged.

Three membranes, much decayed (No. VII. p. 26–30, postea. No. VIII. p. 30–34, postea. No. IX. p. 34–37, postea.), appear to have been propounded on the part of Bruce: and, indorsed on one, is the fragment of a memorandum, containing his appointment of an attorney to carry on the suit against the other competitors (p. 30, postea. § 8.); the following is a summary of the matters which they contain.

Arguments propounded by Bruce in a petition running parallel with that presented to the Auditors at Norham, 3d August, 19 Ed. I.

Antient Kalendars, vol. i. p. 130. § 22.

The beginning of what appears to have been the first membrane is exceedingly defaced: the general tenor of the arguments can be collected. Bruce argues, that, as more worthy in blood, he, in his person, extinguished all rights which could have been possessed by Margaret the grandmother or by Dervergoill the mother of John Balliol. (p. 26–27, postea. No. VII. § 1, 3.) Bruce then meets Balliol's proposition, that inasmuch as Earldoms are the highest dignities, and not partible, and pass by prerogative of seniority, descending to the issue of the eldest daughter, without having respect to proximity of degree, Kingdoms should be transmitted in like manner. This he rebuts by the argument that such a right would be tried by writs, which run according to the laws and usages made or assented to by Kings and Princes within their dominions, whereas a King or a Kingdom is not within the laws of the same Kingdom, but is above the law. (p. 28, postea. § 4.)

Arguments of Bruce against the transmission of right through Margaret or Dervergoill, on the ground that no interest vested in them.

Sir Robert Bruce and Sir John Balliol should be judged according to their estate at the time when the Kingdom became void, without having respect to descent or ancestry, inasmuch as neither Margaret, the grandmother of Sir John, nor Isabella, the mother of Sir Robert, nor Ada, their common ancestor, ever lived to acquire a vested interest. But, at the time when the interests became vested, Sir Robert was nearer in degree than Sir John, and therefore, according to reason, and to all the laws whereby Kings reign, and whereby they should be judged, all prerogative of female eisnée is lost in this case, and the nearest male in degree of the blood female should reign. (p. 28, postea. § 4.) And inasmuch as Sir John Balliol prays that he may be judged according to the laws and usages of England and Scotland in cases when a King hath claimed a Kingdom, Sir Robert Bruce prays of the King that he will show any case in England or in Scotland in which the more distant issue through the line female, excluded the nearer male in degree through the female line. And if he neither can nor will show any such case, then Bruce prays that Balliol's demand may be neither heard nor allowed. (p. 28, postea. § 5.)

Proceedings before the Lord Paramount, &c.

Sir Robert Bruce then prays the King that he will be pleased to consider the examples of this Kingdom and of others, in order that his right may be the better sustained. And inasmuch as Kings are above the laws, and the right to Kingdoms cannot be decided by common law, nor by the laws used amongst subjects, he, Bruce, prays our Lord the King, as his Sovereign Lord and Emperor, — a title evidently referring to the imperial style of the Anglo-Saxon Monarchs, — that he will try and adjudge his right according to the law Royal, by which Kings reign and ought to reign. (p. 28, 29, postea. § 6.) And Bruce then states the recognition of his rights by Alexander II. (p. 29, postea. § 7.) as I have before noticed in abstracting the appeal. And upon the back of the membrane is the appointment made by Bruce of an attorney to carry on his suit against Balliol and the other competitors.

Recognition by Alexander II.

The statements in this petition, relating to the recognition made by Alexander II., are the same as those which are found in the petition recorded on the Great Roll, as having been presented 3rd August 19 Ed. I. (Rymer, Vol. i. p. 777.) But the argument stated to have been propounded by Balliol, is found in the petition presented by the latter, 14 Oct. 20 Ed. I. (Rymer, Vol. i. p. 778.) Other discrepancies of the same nature will be noticed hereafter. I can only account for them by supposing that the French petitions were considered as paper pleadings, and altered and amended until the arguments were reduced into the order in which we now find them on the Roll.

No vested right could accrue to Dervergoill.

The commencement of the second membrane is defaced (p. 26, 27, postea. No. VII. § 1, 2, 3.); but we can collect the arguments tending to show that no right could accrue to Dervergoill, because in her lifetime Robert Bruce was nearer in degree and more worthy of blood, and that he was equally nearest in degree in the time of Margaret, the late Lady (not Queen) of Scotland. Whereas Balliol is one degree further, as appears by his own showing. And the law Royal, by which Kings reign, wills that the nearest in degree shall be heir of the Kingdom: and thus by custom, it is ruled in Scotland in the person of Kings, and, as it appears from chronicles, thus has it happened several times in Scotland.

Proceedings before the Lord Paramount, &c.

No prerogative of eisnesce or seniority, as alleged to have subsisted in Margaret, the grandmother of Balliol, can avail him, inasmuch as she never attained any estate in which such prerogative could take effect in her, nor give any right of succession to her heir female, so long as there should be a male heir apparent in equal degree, when the right to the Kingdom devolved upon the collateral line. (p. 31, postea. No. VIII. § 2.)

No right of eisnesce in Margaret, Balliol's grandmother.

A woman, according to the law by which Kings reign, cannot perform due service to the Lord. She cannot bear arms in the host, give counsel, or do the other acts which appertain to the Chief Lord by reason of homage. (p. 32, postea. No. VIII. § 3.) Prerogative of eisnesce or seniority is given amongst females, when there are no male heirs, from the necessity of the case. But if, when the first degree fails, Bruce argues that female accession can only be allowed from the necessity of the case, and when there is no male occupant.

Proceedings before the Lord Paramount, &c.

a male heir apparent is found in the second degree, who can perform the service due to the Chief Lord, the right vests in him, and both proximity of blood and the usage of the realm concur in deciding that the male heir shall bar the female in demanding the Kingdom, if they be equal in degree.

Incapacity of females, how defined by the Civil Law.

Furthermore, by that law by which Kings reign, it is forbidden that a woman should meddle in the office of judge or advocate, or any thing else which to man belongs, for the same is indecorous to her, and prejudicial to others. (p. 32, postea. No. VIII. §4.) Prerogative of seniority is allowed only to prevent the inconvenience of partition of a Kingdom. But all inconvenience can be avoided, and a judgment given according to law, by pronouncing in favour of Sir Robert Bruce, in whom are united, proximity of blood and the usage of the Kingdom, and in whom the right of the Chief Lord is saved: all of which circumstances fail in the female degree of the first line.

No right can be acquired through a female who herself did not attain a vested right.

Furthermore, Bruce, speaking by his Pleader in the mode and guise recorded in those venerable monuments of jurisprudence, the Year Books, argues that, according to "the law by which kings "reign," if you are appointed heir by testament upon a certain condition, and you die before condition performed, you cannot transmit any right to your representative. For the same reason, seniority in the female ancestor cannot transmit any right to her issue, if she dies before attaining any vested estate in the inheritance. (p. 33, postea. No. VIII. § 5.)

Proceedings before the Lord Paramount, &c.

Rights of females divested by males.

No usage can transmit the right of eisnesce, or seniority of a female, to her female issue: for the law is, that no female shall reign when there is a male heir in equal degree; and the law says, that if the Prince gives a licence or privilegium to a father whose son is out of his right mind, that he may make a will, which he cannot do by common right, such privilege, which is against common right, lasts as long as the son is in this condition; but if the son returns to his right mind, then the privilege ceases. "So it is ad-"vised in our case," that as soon as the male was born in the second line, the force of the custom, which, by necessity, gives to the female in the first line, the prerogative of reigning, can no longer endure. (p. 33, postea. No. VIII. § 6.)

Arguments deduced from the deposition of Childeric by Pope Zachary.

Another membrane (p. 34, postea. No. IX.), which appears to have been annexed to the former, contains arguments of a different nature. Here, Bruce argues that the "Apostle of Rome" deposed the King of France from his royal dignity because he was dissolute in his conduct, and had done badly, as the histories of France tell. And if a man of such dignity could be deposed, much stronger is the reason that a woman, disqualified as she is by her sex, ought not to be received to the Royal dignity: nor transmit the same to her successors, so long as there is a male heir apparent, "as "is our case." *

Argument that rights of inheritance

Furthermore, Bruce argues, that according to law, possession is the right by which

* The passage is very remarkable, and I therefore add it in modern orthography, as before:—"Outre ce, le "droit dit que l'Apotre de Rome deposa le Roi de France "de sa roiale dignité, pour ce que il fut dissolu de son "corps, et maveez (i.e. mauveis choses) avoit [fait], si-"come les histoires de France dient; et trouvé est en "droit. Dont il piert, si homme de tel condition doit "etre deposé, par moult plus forte raison femme ne "doit etre reçue a roiale dignité, ne transmettre a ses suc-"cesseurs, de si que en même le degré, mâle soit apparant, "comme est en notre cas."—On comparing the turns of expression employed in these arguments with the early year books, it will be evidently seen that the petitions were prepared by English lawyers, and not by foreign jurists; and that these English lawyers had a very fair knowledge of civil law and general history.

demand is made of the lands and inheritance of him who is owner or possessor thereof: and which accrues after the death of such owner or possessor. So that if he who has the best right for the time being, dies in the lifetime of such possessor, he cannot transmit such his right to his successors: but the right vests in the person who is nearest in blood at the time of the death of the possessor or person last seised. Whereby it appears that in Sir Robert Bruce, a better right ought to vest, he being nearer in blood than Sir John Balliol, who is in further degree, saving only to Sir Robert Bruce the right of saying more if these reasons do not suffice. (p. 34, postea. No. IX. § 8.)

vest in those who are nearest in blood at the time of the death of the person last seised.

The arguments and cases contained in this document, now severed into fragments (Nos. VII., VIII., and IX.), show that it was parallel or concurrent with the petition presented by Bruce in the convention held 3d Aug. 1291, (Illustrations, p. vii. postea. No. III.); but in that petition, all the reasons alleged in favour of the preeminence of blood male, and deduced from the deposition of Childeric IV., by the authority of the Roman see, are all carefully excluded. I apprehend that the insertion of such an inconvenient example may have been the reason why the petition was amended as it now appears on the Roll.

Proceedings before the Lord Paramount, &c.

Order of adjournment until 2 June 1292.

This petition is followed, upon the same parchment, by the entry of a proceeding (p. 35, 36, postea. No. X.) which also exists in duplicate on a detached membrane, bearing the title "Præfixio facta partibus "per Dominum Regem." All the parties claiming the right to the succession being present before the King, as supreme Lord of Scotland, and also before the Auditors, as well those deputed by the King as those chosen by Bruce and by Balliol, and also before the Bishops, Prelates, Earls, Barons, and other Nobles of the Kingdom of Scotland, and the petitions of all the claimants being read, and also the reasons given thereto, together with all the arguments and reasons exhibited and propounded before the same Auditors, the King, by and with the consent of the Auditors, caused all the petitions to be put in a bag: which being sewed up, and sealed with the seals of the Bishops of Saint Andrew's and Glasgow, and of the Earls of Mar and Buchan, was deposited in safe custody in the Castle of Berwick.

12 Aug. 1291. 19 Ed. I.

And afterwards the King, by assent of the parties, gave them a day on the Morrow of the Holy Trinity, to wit, on the second day of June then next, to proceed in the business; and at the same time he commanded three of his Clerks, that, calling to their assistance the Abbots of Dunfermylin and Holyrood, and the Clerk appointed to the custody of the Rolls of Scotland, they should make search in the Treasury, and also in Monasteries and other places in which it could be presumed that a certain writing propounded by the Count of Holland in support of his exception might be discovered, so that they might have it at the day, with any others which might be found, and which could make for the cause or allegation of any of the claimants of the Kingdom of Scotland.

Edward I. directs careful search to be made for documents evidencing the rights of the parties.

This adjournment of the parties for so long an interval,—a very important feature in the process,—is stated with much more brevity in the Great Roll and the Protocol (Rymer, Vol. i. p. 777. Illustrations, p. xv. § 14. postea.); and amongst other particulars, the instructions given to search the Treasury for documents supporting the rights of the various Competitors are omitted. The order given by Edward I. for making these searches must be considered as a proof of his acting either with entire good faith; or with the most determined hypocrisy: and no impartial enquirer can at all hesitate in adopting the former supposition. In the petition or demand of Florence Count of Holland, as now appearing upon the protocol, and upon the Great Roll, no reference is made to any deed or writing. Possibly it may have related to the gift of the Earldom of Rosse, made upon the marriage of the Count's mother, and noticed in the memorandum annexed to the appeal. (p. 22, postea. No. IV. § 5. Introduction, p. xviii. antea.) Upon the same membrane as the order of adjournment, and immediately following it, is another judicial entry of a sitting of the Court held at Berwick-upon-Tweed, on Wednesday next after the feast of St. Botolph, 20 Ed. I., 18 June 1292, when Bruce and Balliol both appearing, the former replied to the plea in bar of his adversary. (p. 36, postea. No. XI. § 1, 2.) This plea is of a singular nature. Balliol had alleged that Bruce was disqualified to demand the Kingdom, on account of the trespasses which he had committed against the peace, and was therefore incompetent to be heard. Bruce replies, that if Balliol had pleaded, that he, Bruce, had committed felony, or had been attainted of any trespass, so as to bar him from demanding right in lands or tenements, possibly the plea might have been admitted. But that which he alleges is only a trespass, in respect of which he may purchase a writ. If Balliol will sue Bruce for this trespass by writ and at common law, Sir Robert will answer when it is fitting that he should do so.

Proceedings before the Lord Paramount, &c.

Of this exception, no trace is found upon the roll: possibly in consequence of its having been over-ruled.

Another petition contains the "reasons "alleged or propounded by Sir Robert "Bruce, in which he proposes to show, by "argument and by law—par voie de raison "et de droit,—that he is nearer to the "Kingdom of Scotland than Sir John Bal-"liol, or any one else who claims right "therein." (p. 23-26, postea. No. VI.) Bruce alleges that he is the nearest heir, and ought to be received before all other claimants, inasmuch as all the line of William late King of Scotland are dead; and the reversion would have appertained to David Earl of Huntingdon, brother of King William, and grandfather of Sir Robert Bruce, had he been alive when the issue of King William failed. And inasmuch as Sir Robert Bruce was and is the nearest heir in degree by blood female of the collateral line, at the time when the Kingdom became vacant, he is advised that, by law, and by the laws according to which Kings reign, he has more right than any of the other demandants, inasmuch as they are all descendants by female blood of the same collateral line: and are not sons of the brothers or sisters of him or of her who last died seised of the Kingdom.

Bruce alleges that he was the nearer heir at the time of the failure of issue.

Proceedings before the Lord Paramount, &c.

If Dervergoil had been alive, her rights would have been extinguished by the greater worthiness of the male blood in Bruce.

Furthermore, Sir John Balliol cannot claim any right to the Kingdom, unless through his mother: and therefore he cannot be in a better condition than his mother would have been, had she been alive at the time when the Kingdom became vacant. If she had been alive, she could not have claimed any such right, inasmuch as she would have been in equal degree with Bruce, in which case the blood male is more worthy and more pure to demand and govern a Kingdom than blood female: and particularly because a Kingdom neither is nor can be subject to partition.* (p. 24, postea. No. VI. § 3.)

No law or usage in Scotland by which Bruce can be barred of his demand.

Neither law nor usage can be proved to exist in Scotland contrary to the petition of Sir Robert Bruce: nor which can bar him of his demand. Such a case never happened before in relation to the succession to the Realm of Scotland. But now, and in this present case, collaterals must be received in consequence of the default of lineal issue, and of nearness of blood in degree: and by no reason can it be shown, that the more distant in blood is the nearest in inheritance. Inasmuch therefore, as Sir John Balliol is more distant by one degree from the Royal blood of the last tenant of the Kingdom of Scotland, and Sir Robert Bruce was and is one degree nearer, there is no cause shown that Balliol should bar Bruce of his demand. (p. 24, postea. No. VI. § 4.)

Kingdoms not partible.

Kingdoms are admitted not to be subject to coparcenary: therefore the competition for the Kingdom must be determined by that law according to which a Kingdom is not partible. (p. 22, postea. No. VI. § 5.) What is the law thus governing the case?—It is the law of nations, by which Kings reign, and not any custom used among the subjects and tenants of the Kingdom of Scotland.* By such law, the nearest collateral in blood has the best right to demand the Kingdom: therefore Bruce, the nearest heir, through the female line, of the Royal blood of the person last seised of the Kingdom of Scotland, has a better right than any other person to demand the Kingdom.

Usages prevailing amongst subjects cannot bind the Crown.

Usages prevailing amongst the subjects and tenants of the Crown, cannot bind or prejudice the Sovereign. This principle results also from the peculiar nature of the case. Kings are established to govern the people, and not to be governed by them: therefore, although in partible inheritances, the eldest sister may have some advantage, yet in a Kingdom not partible, such custom avails not, and therefore Bruce demands the entirety of the Kingdom. (p. 25, postea. No. VI. § 6.)

of Scotland make fully for him: For it has happened in Scotland, that when a King has had two sons, and the eldest son has left a son, that the younger brother has reigned in Scotland before the son of the eldest son, as may be shown by the Chronicles of Scotland. (p. 25, postea. No. VI. § 7.)

law of Royal succession in Scotland.

This petition bears the antient and coeval indorsement (p. 26, postea. No. VI.), —"Placitum inter Johannem de Balliolo et "Robertum de Brus," and was delivered at Roxburgh, 1292, by Master John de Caen to J. Drokensford, to be kept in the King's Wardrobe. It corresponds in part with the petition presented by Bruce in the meeting at Berwick, on the 14th Oct.* 1292 (Rymer, Vol. i. p. 777, 778. Illustrations, p. xvii. postea. No. IV.); but the arguments do not occur in the same order: and, after the allegations (§ 7.) of the preference given to proximity of blood, the petition on the Great Roll contains a summary of the precedents of modes of succession, appearing more fully upon another document (p. 25, postea. No. XII.); which may, however, have been originally annexed Particular precedents adduced by Bruce, of Royal succession determined by proximity of blood, and not by representation.

to the preceding, though it nevertheless bears a distinct heading or title, "Exempla "producta per Dominum R. de Brus."

In Scotland.

The first examples thus adduced, are taken from the Scottish cases of succession after the death of Kenneth Macalpyn. (p. 37, postea. No. XII. § 1.) The brother of Kenneth, that is to say, Donald, was preferred to Constantine, the son of the deceased Monarch, by reason of his proximity to Alpyn; and upon the death of Constantine, who left a son, Edh, the younger brother of Constantine, succeeded in preference to Constantine's son, and from Constantine and Edh descended all the Kings of Scotland who have reigned, even to the present time. As the Kings of Scotland have been found nearer in degree, so have they reigned one after another: and this appears by the Chronicles of Scotland, until the time of Malcolm, the husband of St. Margaret. This portion of the document is much mutilated; we can collect, however, from its remains, and from the reply made by Balliol, that it stated, that Malcolm had a younger brother (p. 45, postea. No. XIV. § 3.), who reigned after Malcolm his elder brother, and kept out the son of Malcolm, by reason of his own proximity.

In England.

That the title by proximity in a junior branch, excluded representation in a senior branch, further appeared, as Bruce alleged, from the examples of Kings who had reigned in England. (p. 38, postea. No. XII. § 4, 5.) These examples are two: the succession of Edward the Confessor, in preference to the issue of Edmund Ironside; and of John, in preference to the issue of Geoffrey Plantagenet; the latter case being alleged to have been guided by the precedent of the Confessor.

In Spain.

A like example, Bruce proceeds, may be found in Spain, in respect to the King who now is. (p. 38, postea. No. XII. § 4.) Alfonso, King of Spain, had by his first wife two sons, both married. Ferdinand, the elder of such sons, espoused Blanche, daughter of Louis King of France, by whom he begot two sons who yet are alive; and when the marriage was had between them, instruments were executed, by which the King of Spain, the Grandees of his Kingdom assenting thereto, agreed that the heirs of Ferdinand should reign in the event of his death in the lifetime of his father. But, nevertheless, the King who now is, reigns peaceably by reason of nearness of blood, although the sons of Ferdinand are yet alive.

Proceedings before the Lord Paramount, &c.

Case of the Infantes de la Cerda.

This is the well known case of Alfonso and Ferdinand, the Infantes de la Cerda, the grandchildren of Alfonso X., the throne having been assumed upon his death by Sancho IV. his second son, the younger brother of the Infant Don Ferdinand, who occupied the throne to the prejudice of his nephews. The term, "peaceable possession," however, could scarcely be applied to his troubled reign. It is not unworthy of notice that the geographical title of King of Spain is here given to Alfonso of Castille, perhaps one of the earliest instances in which it is so employed.

In Savoy.

Bruce then proceeded to state an example taken from the succession in the house of Savoy (p. 39, postea. No. XII. § 5.), but here the document becomes imperfect, and the text is lost.

These examples abridged, and in part entered on the Great Roll, possibly by design.

In the Great Roll, the examples taken from the Scottish succession are stated very succinctly; those from Castille and Savoy are barely noticed. (Rymer, Vol. i. p. 778. Illustrations, p. xix. postea. § 6.) Those from England, are wholly suppressed; and it is to be more than suspected, that in this condensation, we may distinctly trace the prudence of Sir Roger Brabazon, and of the other Councillors about the King.

Proceedings before the Lord Paramount, &c.

I shall now proceed to the original answers or pleas of Balliol, which are, unfortunately, extremely mutilated and decayed. One of these documents appears to have contained seven reasons or arguments (p. 39–43, postea. No. XIII. § 1, 2.), the first being to show that no right ever vested in Isabella the mother of Robert Bruce, because, the Kingdom not being partible, the eldest sister took and transmitted the same right as an elder brother would have done: and if the mother of Bruce had no right, neither could any right vest in him.

Answers put in by Balliol.

Examples are adduced to show that, according to the laws and usages of Scotland, Earldoms are not partible. (p. 40, postea. No. XIII. § 3.) The first precedent is in the family of Bruce himself, in respect of the Earldom of . . . . . ; a blank which we must fill up with the word "Carrick," whilome acquired by Sir Robert Bruce as the inheritance of Margery his wife, the eldest of the four daughters of the late Earl. Another example, is that of the Earldom of Athol, adjudged in full Parliament

Balliol urges that according to the laws of Scotland Earldoms are not partible.

Proceedings before the Lord Paramount, &c.

to be the right of Isabella the eldest daughter. And it seems also to be alleged, that the Castle of Dundee* had been adjudged to Dervergoil, the mother of Balliol, by reason of her primogeniture. It is greatly to be regretted that this important paragraph should be so mutilated, that we can only guess at its original import.

Balliol then argues against the effect of the recognition made by Alexander II. (p. 41, postea. No. XIII. § 5.), in the manner which I have already brought before the reader.

Acts of rebellion committed by Bruce in the time of the Lady of Scotland.

The seventh and last reason is this (p. 42, postea. No. XIII. § 6.), that when the Bishops and great men of Scotland had sworn to defend the Kingdom for their Lady, the daughter of the King of Norway, and that they would keep the peace of her Land. And when they had done fealty to her as to their Lady liege, Sir Robert Bruce, and the Earl of Carrick, his son, attacked the Castle of Dumfries with fire and arms and banners displayed: and against the peace, expelled the forces of the Queen who held the same. Hence, Sir

* The name is dubious.

Robert advanced to the castle of . . . . .* He then caused a proclamation to be made by one Patrick M'Guffok within the bailey of the same castle. The tenor or subject of this proclamation cannot be precisely collected. Certain individuals were warned away: and the result is stated to have been, that good subjects quitted the land or were banished therefrom. Furthermore, the Earl of Carrick, by the assent and power of his father, took the Lady of Scotland's Castle of Wigton, and killed several of her people there. Defective as these notices are, they are very valuable as elucidating the obscurest portions of Scottish history.

Proceedings before the Lord Paramount, &c.

Balliol, in this document, concludes by praying that right may be done to him according to the usages of Scotland and of England, and not by the Imperial law: for the Kingdom of Scotland is held of the Crown of England, and not of any Empire, and it would redound to the prejudice of our Lord the King, if by Imperial law, judgment should be given in his court concerning lay fee. (p. 43, postea. § 6.)

Balliol urges Edward not to submit himself to the Imperial law.

* "Au chastel de Bot....." I must leave it to others to complete the name, of which only one syllable remains: and that so nearly obliterated, that I am doubtful of its true reading.

Ancient description, &c. of this document.

Some of the arguments in this document, which is extremely decayed and injured, correspond with the plea or answer put in by Balliol, 14 Oct. 1292* (Rymer, Vol. i. p. 778. Illustrations, p. xix. &c. postea.); but the resemblance is only in the general tenor. It bears two endorsements; the first, states that it was delivered at Roxburgh by John de Caen, the notary, to John de Drokensford, who so often appears as Keeper of the Wardrobe. In another coeval endorsement it is described as the "Placitum" between Balliol and Bruce concerning the Kingdom of Scotland, "sub sigillis eorum-"dem et aliorum Magnatum Scociæ." "Divers rolls" thus authenticated, appear in Bishop Stapleton's Kalendar, and this, without doubt, is one of them: but whether it was annexed to the other documents of the same description cannot be now ascertained; nor can we discover in what stage of the suit it was propounded.

Antient Kalendars, &c. vol. i. p. 130. § 22.

Further answer or replication of Balliol.

Another document, which may also be termed the reply or answer of Balliol, was originally contained in four rolls or membranes, as appears from the notes at the top of the third and fourth membranes, in which the number is expressed in Roman numerals.* In the second of these membranes, as they now exist, Balliol argues against the cases which Bruce has adduced from Scottish history to support the doctrine of preference given to the brothers of the late Monarch before his issue. (p. 43–51, postea. No. XIV.)

* Or 15 Oct., according to the Protocol.

Proceedings before the Lord Paramount, &c.

To these Balliol replies (p. 45, postea. No. XIV. § 3.), that, so far from aiding the case of Bruce, they make against him. When the brother has thus entered by ousting the son of his brother, it is a

He maintains that the Scottish cases, cited by Bruce, make against him.

* But at the foot of the "iii. rotulus," and in that part which, when the membranes were fastened together for the purpose of having the seals affixed, was covered by the fold of the outer parchment (as in a modern deed), and thus concealed from view, is an arabic cypher 3, furnishing an additional proof of the employment of these numerals for matters of business, long before they became recognized as fit for the text of a manuscript or record. (Hallam's Lit. Hist. — Palgrave's Parliamentary Writs, vol. i. Chron. Abst. p. 8.) Perhaps many of my readers may not be aware how very long it was before this fitness was acknowledged. The Roman numerals continued in use in the Chambre des Comptes at Paris till the reign of Louis XV., and also in our English Exchequer, until the late reconstruction of the Court of Receipt by the recent Statute, or until October 1835, when the antient Court expired, and with it the last lingering relick of legal palæography, the Court hand. The rolls of accounts, &c. continued to be kept in the Roman numeral; though, in some cases, for the convenience of the Clerks, the arabic figure was placed by its side. The Court hand was also used for entries in the Pell Office.

preference given to the more distant of blood, for the son takes flesh and blood from his father and mother, and from none else, and thus is he nearer to father and mother than to any one else; for which reason the inheritance of the father should rather come to his son, who has issued from him, than to his brother, who is not his issue.

Particular case of Donald Bane and Duncan.

To the particular case of Donald or Donald Bane, the brother of Malcolm, who entered by usurping upon the issue of such his said brother (p. 45, postea. No. XIV. § 4.), Balliol makes the following special reply. As soon as Duncan, the son of Malcolm, knew the event, he came unto William then King of England, his Lord, complaining how he had been ousted of his inheritance against right and reason. And King William, wishing to do right to his man and tenant, granted the Kingdom to him, and received his fealty for the same. Duncan, therefore, advanced to Scotland, and ejected Donald Bane, and reigned as King for one year; until, by treason, he was slain, and Donald Bane re-entered the Kingdom, and took possession thereof. But King William ejected him by his might, and appointed Edgar to be King, the same Edgar being the son of Malcolm and the brother of Duncan, who reigned all his life, and died without heir of his body.

Proceedings before the Lord Paramount, &c.

After the death of Edgar, Alexander his brother entered, and reigned all his life, and died without heir of his body.

Balliol's deduction of lineal succession.

After the death of Alexander, David, his brother, entered, and held the Kingdom all his life, having had a son, Henry by name; and this Henry died in the lifetime of David his father.

And after the death of David, Malcolm, the son of Henry the son of David, entered upon the Kingdom: and so in all times since, the Kings of Scotland have reigned by succession in the line of blood, in the same manner as Earls and Barons and others of the Kingdom.

And thus, when King William, Chief Lord of Scotland, ousted the before-mentioned Donald, the brother of the before-mentioned Malcolm, he received the sons of the said Malcolm in the Kingdom of Scotland as his nearest heirs in the Kingdom of Scotland. And through Edgar, thus admitted by his Superior, have reigned all the Kings in Scotland from that time to the present day. They all have reigned by right line of blood, and according to the laws and usages which were in the time of King David, until now. Therefore, Balliol is advised that no right can descend or accrue to the issue of the second sister, living the elder or her issue.

Balliol's account of the authority exercised by Rufus as Over-Lord contrasted with the versions of modern histories.

The passages of the historians relating to these transactions will be found hereafter. Some might be acquainted with the events from written memorials; to others they were known by general tradition or recollection. Balliol quoted them as he understood them, and as they were universally understood in Scotland. And it is not uninstructive to compare the competitor's plain narrative with the version given by modern authorities.*

(Sim. Dunelm. Flor. Wigorn. Mailros.)

Balliol then resumes his argument (p. 46, postea. No. XIV. § 5.), as grounded upon the admission made by Bruce, that King William and Earl David were brothers, and that after the death of William his son Alexander reigned, Earl David, his uncle, being yet living; and the issue of him by right line of blood has continued to reign.

Kingdom of Scotland, as Balliol urges, has, since the reign of Edgar, descended like an Earldom or a Barony.

"1097. Also in the same year, soon after Michaelmas, "went Edgar Atheling with an army by the King's com- "mand into Scotland, and with hard fighting won that "land and drove out the King Dufenal; and his kinsman "Edgar, who was son of King Malcolm and of Margaret "the Queen, he there appointed King, in fealty to the King "William, and afterwards again returned to England."— "And his mæg Eadgar, se þæs Mælcolmes sunu Cynges and "Margarite his Cpenan, he þæp in þæs Cynges Willelmes "healdan to Cynge gesette, and siþþan ongean into Eng- "land forþ." (Ingram's Sax. Chronicle.)

It is instructive to compare the above passages with the modern paraphrase of Lord Hailes: —

"1094. Duncan, a bastard of the late King, had been "left as an hostage in England. William Rufus invested "him with the honour of knighthood, and retained him "in his service. Duncan sought the permission of William "to invade Scotland, and, having sworn fealty, obtained it. "Aided by a numerous band of adventurers, English and "Normans, he expelled Donald Bane, and reigned in his "stead."

"In 1097, William Rufus commiserating the forlorn "state of the family of Malcolm III., with his approba- "tion and aid Edgar Atheling assembled a body of "troops, marched into Scotland, overcame Donald, and "placed Edgar the son of Malcolm on the throne of his "ancestors."

Proceedings before the Lord Paramount, &c.

And ever since the King of England, as Chief Lord, delivered seisin to Edgar the son of Malcolm, the Kingdom has descended in right line, like Earldoms and Baronies. Thereupon Balliol prays the King, that, according to the rules of his Crown and of his Land of England, and also according to the laws and usages of Scotland which were in the time of King Alexander in like case, he may be judged; which laws and usages he, the King, is bound to maintain.

Balliol argues against the applicability of the examples drawn from the Kingdom of Spain.

Balliol urges (p. 47, postea. No. XIV. § 6.) that the examples produced from the Kingdom of Spain ought not in anywise to harm him; for, other are the laws of Spain, and other are the laws of Scotland. The case of King John, who was acknowledged and received by his Baronage as heir apparent, cannot be drawn or taken as an example.

Balliol's refutation of Bruce's arguments against female rights.

As to what Sir Robert has alleged, that a woman cannot reign, he has said what pleases him (p. 47, postea. No. XIV. § 7.); for he and all the Baronage of Scotland accepted and received the Lady Margaret as the Queen and Lady of Scotland. Maud, the Empress, also was Queen and Lady of England. If a woman cannot reign, as is argued by Sir Robert Bruce, he can claim no right in the Kingdom, for he has none excepting through his mother Isabella.

Proceedings before the Lord Paramount, &c.

The better to declare and explain his right, Sir John Balliol (p. 48, postea. No. XIV. § 8.) shows, that if Isabella, the mother of Bruce, had committed felony, he, Balliol, would not have been foreclosed from demanding his right. But if Margaret, the elder daughter of Earl David and grandmother of Balliol, or Dervergoil his mother, or John Balliol himself had committed felony, then the heirs of Isabella would have been foreclosed, as well as the heirs of Margaret, because in her the right vested.

Rights of Bruce would have been forfeited if Balliol's line had committed felony; therefore he only takes in reversion after them.

Furthermore, upon the fourth membrane (iiii. rotis) of the answer, Sir John Balliol shows (p. 49, 50, postea. No. XIV. § 9, 10.), in order the better to explain his right to the Kingdom, that inasmuch as the seisin of the Kingdom of Scotland is in the seisin of the King of England, Sovereign Lord of Scotland, he, the King of England, is bound to do right to all demandants, and to restore the Kingdom to him who has best right therein.

King of England bound to execute the law.

of Scotland, albeit in his own Kingdom of England he is above the law, yet he does not by his power or will, and without the judgment of his Court, oust those who have made purprestures upon his demesne lands; but he sues a writ out of his own Chancery, and demands against the tenants the tenements in the seisin of his ancestors, claiming by the same rules of descent as Earls, Barons, and other small folk demand and ought to demand lands in the Kingdom of Scotland and in the Kingdom of England, to which the Kingdom of Scotland is subjected.

Seisin of the Kingdom of Scotland should be demanded by the same rules as a private inheritance.

Therefore the Kingdom of Scotland ought to be restored to him, Balliol, as if it were an inheritance demanded in the Kingdom of England between party and party. And those demanding seisin in the Kingdoms of England or Scotland, ought to be guided by the self same rules as if they were seeking a rightful judgment, when demanding lands or tenements of the seisin of their ancestors Kings of Scotland or of England.* And Balliol concludes by the argument, that all those through whom it was necessary for him to count in support of his claim of inheritance, would have been equally able to have succeeded to the inheritance if they had been alive at the time of the death of the Maid of Norway. This answer must have been put in at some period before the Midsummer adjournment, 20 Ed. I.; but the instrument upon the roll, which in part corresponds to it in tenor, was not put in until the following October. (Rymer, Vol. i. p. 778, 779. Illustrations, p. xvii. postea. No. IV.)

Proceedings before the Lord Paramount, &c.

Upon the same fourth membrane, which contains the conclusion of the answer, and immediately following the same, is a judicial memorandum (p. 50, postea. No. XIV. § 11.), stating that on Wednesday next after the feast of St. John the Baptist, at Berwick-upon-Tweed, in the presence of Edward King of England, Sovereign Lord of Scotland, and in the twentieth year of his reign, before the eighty of Scotland, elected by Robert Bruce and John Balliol, and before the twenty-four of England, named by the King, the demands, answers, reasons, — the whole process between the parties, — was read, heard, and fully understood before the King and the hundred and four. And the before-mentioned Robert and John were asked by the King, whether they had any further arguments to propound in support of their claims, before judgment should be given thereon: and both answered, peremptorily,—no,—unless the King should charge them or make any demand, for it was their opinion that enough had been said to enable the King to proceed to judgment. And in testimony of all such matters, the said John Balliol, William Bishop of St. Andrew's, John Earl of Buchan, and Gilbert Earl of Angus thereunto affixed their seals.*

Declaration by the Auditors, that the rights of the parties had been sufficiently discussed, 21 June 1292.

There is also another document, an original instrument, concurrent in effect with the memorandum, though dated at Berwick-upon-Tweed, the Saturday next before the feast of St. John the Baptist, 20 Ed. I., under the seals of the Auditors; those on the part of Bruce and Bal-

* Besides the above, there are three small fragments (Nos. XV., XVI., XVII., p. 51, 52, postea.) of similar instruments. Two are portions of answers made by Bruce; one contains a few lines of the last reasons propounded by Sir John Balliol, at Berwick-upon-Tweed, on Thursday next after the feast of St. Botolph, 20 Ed. I. These relics furnish indications of the number of important documents which we have lost.

liol being described as having been elected or chosen by them, whilst the others are described as being named by the King of England. Here it is stated that, the arguments propounded by the Competitors and their counsel having been finally delivered in writing, they were asked whether they would say any more or deliver any further matters in writing; whereupon they answered—no,—saving their reasons before judgment, by which they might move their Judge. And the hundred and four Auditors, having thereupon had due debate and counsel, all replied unanimously, that enough had been said, to enable the King of England to proceed to give judgment between the parties concerning the Kingdom of Scotland. Neither the substance of the memorandum nor this instrument are noticed upon the roll; and although not entirely inconsistent with the doubts stated therein to have been entertained by the Auditors respecting the law, yet it opens a different view of the proceedings and affords much matter for consideration.

Proceedings before the Lord Paramount, &c.

In the conduct pursued by Edward as Judge during this important litigation, we may certainly discern a leaning to the principles of primogeniture and direct representation. Hence, I suspect that, upon the roll, the arguments and examples adduced by Bruce, exemplifying the departure from those principles in Spain and Savoy, and still more in Scotland and in England, are either noticed briefly, or completely excluded. Nor need we wonder if the Sovereign of England avoided having an instance of the king-deposing power exerted by a Pope, enrolled upon this record of his own supremacy. But it would be difficult to condemn the preference thus given to principles calculated to ensure the peace of the country and the stability of the throne, by introducing a regular canon of inheritance, in place of a vague and fluctuating right. And we have not the slightest reason for surmising that Edward used any undue influence upon the Auditors; or that they gave an opinion contrary to their conscience, or to what they held to be the law.

HISTORICAL EVIDENCE RELATING TO THE SCOTTISH SUBJECTION, RECORDED IN THE CATHEDRAL OR MONASTIC CHRONICLES.

Historical Evidence relating to the Scottish Subjection.

VII. The proofs of the superiority of the Crown of England could not, from their nature, be completed otherwise than by the evidence afforded by the chronicles of past times. These were not preserved amongst the records of the Realm, and the only repositories in which they could be found were in the ecclesiastical libraries. Writs under the Great Seal, 8 March, 18 Ed. I. (p. 89, postea. § 1.), and under the Privy Seal, 23 March, 19 Ed. I., were therefore addressed by Edward I. to the Cathedrals and principal Monasteries throughout England (p. 123, postea. No. XXXVII.), commanding them to search their chronicles and archives for all matters relating to Scotland, and to transmit the same to the King under their common seals: and many of the certificates transmitted accordingly by these establishments, are still extant. This proceeding affords a strong testimony of the honour and integrity of the English King. The forgery of documents was not unfrequently practised in the middle ages: and there would have been little difficulty in giving an intelligible hint, that a good gersume would fall to the share of the clerk whose diligence might discover further proofs of the King's undoubted rights on the rolls of the Chancery, or in the chests and forcers of the Treasury. Nor would a Monk of Croyland or Saint Alban's have been incompetent to produce a fairly illuminated tome in which such homage as was rendered to Edgar, might have been represented as repeated to every succeeding Basileus of Britain. But, as will be seen when we proceed to detail the certificates, the results of the examinations were simply such as might be expected from honesty on either side: truth was asked, truth was told, and nothing more.

In the same manner as Edward sought sincere testimony of past events, equally were his efforts directed to the preservation of authentic evidence for posterity. Writs were addressed to the several Monasteries and Cathedrals, transmitting, under the seal of the Exchequer, transcripts of the submissions of the Competitors, then and now in the Treasury, commanding them to cause them to be enrolled in their chronicles, "in perpetuam

BATH.

Bath.—Return of searches.

The Prior and Convent of Bath certify to the King that they have searched their chronicles and other books commemorating from old time the state of the Kingdom of England, as therein-after appeared. accession of the Conqueror to the accession of Henry II.,—the dissensions between that Monarch and his sons,—and the capture of William the Lion by the forces of Henry II.;—but concerning the liberation of the King of Scots they can find nothing. of the same import. (p. 60, 61, postea. § 1-10.) From the Conquest to the accession of Henry II. they seem to be furnished by the same sources, and by Hoveden and by Richard of Hexham. (p. 61, 62, postea. § 11-17.) The account of the capture of William the Lion and the concord of 1175 is extracted from the author whom we usually quote as Benedictus Abbas; the covenant or concord is also given as in this writer, but it affords corrections of the names of the hostages. Some other statements follow from the same source and from Hoveden: but in the account of the homage at Lincoln, it is said that the oath of fealty was taken upon the crozier because there was no book at hand. It then states the expedition of 1209, and the consequent peace, but that the precise terms of the treaty not being sufficiently known to them, they have not detailed the particulars; a strong proof of the good faith with which they proceeded in their enquiries. The indorsement directs a compendious enrolment of the contents of the document, and which was duly performed. (p. 62–67, postea. § 21–27.)

Care taken not to make return upon imperfect information.

BURTON UPON TRENT.

Burton upon Trent.

From this Monastery no return is made, excepting a full copy of the convention or concord between William the Lion and Henry II., affording some variations or corrections in the names of the hostages. The Monks do not give this document as extracted from a chronicle, or connected with other historical matter, and therefore the probability is, that the concord existed on their register as a substantive document. This House, as appears from their annals, possessed some channel by which they obtained a larger proportion than usual of the state documents of the age, several of the most important of the legislative proceedings of the revolutionary changes of government in the reign of Henry III. being there, and nowhere else, preserved.

CARLISLE.

Carlisle.—From Simon of Durham, &c.

The Prior and Convent of Carlisle acknowledge the receipt of the King's writ or letter. And they return, that they have diligently made search and examination in all the chronicles which they have, and which they transmit by the hands of the Precentor of the Cathedral.

Many of the excerpts agree in substance with Simon of Durham, with Hoveden, and with Benedictus Abbas; but there are variations which might render it doubtful whether they were not, in part at least, abstracted from inedited chronicles. The treaty of peace of 1221, between Alexander and John, is fully stated. (p. 75, postea. § 38, 39.)

CROYLAND.

Croyland.—From Hoveden and Benedictus Abbas.

This return begins (§ 1.) with an enumeration, unfortunately somewhat mutilated, of the holders of castles in some given year (of which the date is lost) in the reign of Henry II. It is followed by the details, as in Hoveden and Benedictus Abbas, of the invasion of Northumberland by William the Lion, his capture at Alnwick, and the treaty or concord of submission. Here a remark of some moment must be made. I have shown, on another occasion, that there are the strongest reasons for supposing that the chronicle which passes under the name of Ingulphus is spurious—forged—or, if that be too strong a term, a rifacciamento,—compiled partly from authentic, partly from spurious documents, and partly from local traditions and oral legends, in the reign of Edward II.,

No extracts from Ingulphus in this Croyland certificate; such absence affording furor perhaps even at a later period. Now this absence of any reference, either direct or indirect, to a writer whose work, in after times, was considered as the peculiar treasure and pride of the Abbey, affords a strong presumption that the Chronicle attributed to him, did not then exist: and the more particularly, since the so called history of Ingulphus contains an account of the fealty performed to the Conqueror by Malcolm III., one of the most important passages in the history of the relations between the Crowns.*

But that, besides the matters which he has therein set forth, the chronicles contain many other particulars of the admirable deeds of the Kings of England, for which they will make search. Huntingdon.

The return of extracts from the chronicles of St. Mary Huntingdon, is made out with much care in two columns, the smaller column consisting of marginal notes, generally relating to English history. The main column begins with the succession of the Scoto-Pictish Kings. (§ 1.) It seems as if the Compilers principally made use of the chronicle of Melrose; at least there are some facts stated in it, such as the birth of Alexander II. and the homage* performed to the infant by the

A general return is made of the matters relating to the rights of the King over Scotland, as found in the chronicles and antient books preserved in the Religious Houses within the diocese of London, and which are taken in the following order.

WALTHAM.

Waltham.—Itinerary of Richard I.

From this House were obtained extracts from the "Brut," a chronicle which, in this instance, appears to have been continued to the reign of Henry II. Another extract is given from a small book called "Itinerarium Regis Ricardi." But this is not the work of Geoffry Vinesaulf so entitled, for that book does not contain the compositions between Richard Cœur de Lion and William, which are here given as taken from the Itinerary.

of Henry I. to Matilda the daughter of Malcolm, and his giving his own illegitimate daughter as a wife to Alexander I. But in this last extract, the Clerk, by omitting a line in his transcript from the original history, has attributed to Henry I. the restoration of Duncan and Edgar, effected by William Rufus. The seal of the Abbot and the conventual seal are affixed. And the certificate is stated to contain all that could be found "in gestis "Anglorum" concerning the Kingdoms of England and Scotland. — "To be exa- "mined, and that which is new, enrolled," is the purport of the memorandum endorsed.

It is rather remarkable that no other chronicles are quoted in this certificate, as it cannot be doubted but that William of Malmesbury had access to a well-furnished library. Unless, indeed, the Monks supposed that his celebrated work relieved them, when they made their return, from the necessity of consulting any other sources.

Norwich.—Chronicles of the Cathedral destroyed when the Church was burnt.

The Prior and Convent excuse themselves by stating, that their chronicles, containing the memorials of antient times, were destroyed when the Church was burnt, or carried off by the citizens in the confusion. But they transmit what they find in a small chronicle compiled by a Monk of their House, the facts of which they set forth. These consist of four short passages relating to the transactions with Henry II.; and this is all which they can find concerning the deeds or acts of the King's predecessors, or his rights in Scotland. The chronicle thus alluded to, may possibly be the chronicle of Bartholomew of Norwich. The statement is curious, as showing the extent of the ravages occasioned by the fire.

The Abbot and Convent of Sawtrey, set forth the King's writ received by the hands of the King's Serjeant, John Picard, upon which they ground their return. It consists of the genealogy of the Kings of Scotland as deduced from St. Margaret to Alexander the Second, which, as they say, they find in the life of David King of Scots; and if the King wishes to be better certified thereof, he will find the biography of the before-mentioned King David in many of the abbeys in the North, in England or in Scotland, and more particularly in the Abbey of Rievaulx.

TEWKESBURY.

Tewkesbury.

The return consists of extracts taken textually from "the history of the English, "composed by the Archdeacon Henry," usually known as Henry of Huntingdon, "and addressed by him to Alexander "Bishop of Lincoln,"—being in fact the history which we now possess. The extracts from Huntingdon continue until the reign of Stephen; extracts are then given from other chronicles not named (p. 128, postea. § 16, 17.) relating to the disputes and pacification between King John and William the Lion, 1209; and upon the certificate a memorandum is indorsed, that a letter is to be written to the Abbot to transmit this last chronicle.

Worcester. —Marianus Scotus quoted.

The return from Worcester Cathedral consists of textual extracts from Henry of Huntingdon, and from the chronicle of Marianus Scotus, which we usually quote as Florence of Worcester. The indorsed memorandum directs that it be examined, and what is found new therein, enrolled.

NOTES AND EXTRACTS FROM THE RETURNS.

Extracts made for the use of the Royal Commissioners, &c.

Lastly, we have notes and extracts from the returns, apparently taken for the use of the Royal Commissioners, or of those who drew up the Great Roll. A particular memorandum is made of the pacification of 1209, and the hostages given thereupon, from the chronicle of Tewkesbury. The writer also notices, that it appears by a schedule at the end of the chronicles of Scotland, that at Alnwick, Alexander the son of William King of Scots did homage to John for all the rights for which his father had performed homage. Three copies of this document are extant, differing from each other in slight particulars.

p. 134, postea. No. XL.

Amongst other points of information to be deduced from these returns, the historical enquirer may perhaps be enabled thereby to identify some of the manuscripts of the antient English chroniclers still extant in our public libraries and elsewhere, by comparing such codices with the extracted passages.

It may be remarked that the Anglo-Saxon chronicle is never quoted as an authority:

a proof, perhaps, that the language had now generally become obsolete, or at least so far antiquated, as not to be generally and currently intelligible. Nor is any allusion made to the charters which evidence the attendance of the Scottish Subreguli as vassals of the court of the Anglo-Saxon Basileus.

(p. 138, postea. § 1.) Other debts due from his father, and amounting at least to £1,000*, will be accepted by instalments of a like amount. (p. 140, postea. § 3.) Considerate and favourable answers are further given to such requests as could not be granted on the terms in which they were asked. All bear the impress of Edward's debonnaireté and liberality.

DRAFT OF THE NOTARIAL PROTOCOL OF THE JUDGMENT GIVEN AGAINST BALLIOL, AND DEPRIVING HIM OF HIS KINGDOM BY REASON OF HIS MISDEEDS.—HOMAGES AND FEALTIES OF THE SCOTS.

Draft of Protocol of Judgment given against Balliol, &c.

X. Edward was particularly anxious to preserve good and legal evidence of the judgments which he gave. This instrument begins with a statement or recital of the manner in which John Balliol had been put into possession of the Kingdom of Scotland, by virtue of the judgment of the Over-Lord (p. 141, postea. § 1.), and reference is made to the special injunction which he then received,—he was duly to govern and rule the Kingdom thus adjudged to him, administering justice to all his subjects, that no one should have any just cause of complaint against him, so that the King of England, as Superior or Over-Lord of the Kingdom of Scotland, should not be bound, in consequence of any such neglect, to apply any correction or remedy. (p. 151, postea. § 6.)

p. 141, postea. No. XLIII.

The grave complaints preferred against Balliol by Roger Bartholomew, the Burgess of Berwick, and by Macduff, the son of the Earl of Fife,—the delays of John Balliol,— the rising or rebellion of the Scots,—are fully and emphatically stated (p. 142–149, postea. § 1, 3.); and, lastly, how, the King having entirely subjugated Scotland, Balliol had freely and completely surrendered his Kingdom into the hands of the King of England, acknowledging his acts of treason and disloyalty before the King, the Prelates, the Earls, the Barons, and other the Magnates and Proceres of the Realm, as by the public instrument written by the hand of Master Andrew de Tang the Notary Public, would duly appear. (p. 150, postea. § 3.)

Surrender of the Kingdom by Balliol.

Fordun, xi. 63.

It is rather remarkable that this protocol, when first drawn, referred also to letters patent of resignation executed by Balliol under the Great Seal of Scotland: but that the paragraph was cancelled by being included between the syllables "va—cat" at the beginning and the end. Does this give any support to the assertion made by Baldred Bisset, the Scottish Nuncio or Ambassador at the Court of Rome, who maintained that Balliol made no such resignation, but that Edward fabricated the instrument, and appended the Great Seal of Scotland to the same?—The ceremony of resignation is characterized as a humiliating feudal penance: and Fordun states, that he performed it holding a white wand in his hand. Here I suspect some misapprehension, and that the rod or wand was not a token of penitence, but the symbol by which the surrender was made, according to the forms of the Anglo-Saxon beneficiary law, and observed, as is well known, in the case of the surrenders of copyholds to this very day.

Fordun, xi. 26.

General submission of the subjects of the Scottish Crown.

The protocol further states, that, these matters being completed, the Prelates, Earls, Barons, Nobles, and Communities of the Kingdom of Scotland, coming of their own free will to the King of England, and whom the King afterwards received into his peace, performed their homages and fealties to him as their immediate and own proper Lord of the Kingdom of Scotland, and executed instruments, confirmed by their seals, of such homages and fealties, which are deposited in the Treasury of the King of England. And afterwards the Kingdom of Scotland, with all its cities, burghs, towns, castles, and fortalices being surrendered into the hands of the King of England, he thereupon granted the custody thereof to the Earl of Warrenne, appointing also Treasurers, Chamberlains, Escheators, Sheriffs, and other Bailiffs and Ministers for the government of the Kingdom of Scotland.

The Ragman Rolls, published by the Bannayne Club, p. 55.

Adjudication of the forfeiture entered upon the Ragman Rolls.

The substance of the judgment thus given, is entered upon one of those very singular documents, commonly called the Ragman Rolls, deposited in duplicates in the Chancery and in this Treasury. The former are perfect, and have recently been printed by a private society: the latter, are much mutilated, whole membranes having perished by decay.

Instruments of homage recorded on the Ragman Rolls.

At the same period, the Prelates, Earls, and people of Scotland, submitting themselves to the King, performed fealty and homage, and bound themselves by solemn instruments, under their seals, for the performance of their obligations. These instruments are also recorded upon the Ragman Rolls: and the learned Editor remarks, that, "had the original instruments of "homage under the seals of the parties "been still entire, greater certainty in the "names and additions of individuals might "have been ensured; but these have "perished by gradual decay; and in the "Royal Treasury of the Chapter House "little more than some fragments are "now to be found, together with a few of "the seals which had been, not inappropriately, secured by strong hempen cords."

Some originals yet extant in the Treasury.

With respect to the total loss of these instruments, the information given to Mr. Thomson was incorrect, for no less than sixty-four were found by me, in such a state as to admit of their being transcribed, or in great part preserved. Guided by Mr. Thomson's opinion of their importance, they are printed, with the omission only, in some instances, of formal repetitions. Besides, in many cases, correcting the readings of the Ragman Rolls, they supply some instruments not found upon those documents.

pernors for Sir Robert Bruce, under pain of forfeiting goods and chattels, life and limb, if he should not thenceforward conduct himself truly and loyally towards the King, and never rise against the King or his heirs. But it is declared, that when and so soon as the Bruce should deliver his daughter Margery as an hostage, that they then should be quit and discharged from their mainpernorships.

Singular error, occurring from the mistake of a transcriber.

The first of these instruments, or the submission, concludes with these words: "Escrit a Irewin le noevime jour du mois "de Juyl en le an del regne le Reys Ed-"ward vintime quint." (p. 198.) This passage is thus printed by Rymer (i. p. 868.) "Escrit a Sire Willaume, le noemme jour "du moys de Juyl en le an del regne le "Reys Edward vintime quint."—The original is somewhat defaced, and Rymer, or his transcriber, not being conversant with the character, nor very familiar with the language, in reading the word Irewin, mistook a partially effaced flourish of the capital I for an S, and the three parallel strokes of the concluding syllable "in" for the one letter m, thus altering the word to "Sirewm." The next stage in error, was to divide this word into Sire Willaume, and thus the printed text was formed. Upon this text, appearing in an authentic publication, the subsequent writers of Scottish history had to work, and it was quite natural to suppose that Sire Willaume could be none other than Sir William Wallace. Hence Lord Hailes observes, "the meaning is, as "I presume, that the Barons had notified "to Wallace that they had made terms "of accommodation for themselves and "their party." "But Wallace scorned "submissions," &c. (i. p. 302.) The whole of this reasoning, and much more, is therefore grounded upon the false reading of a modern copying clerk.

In pursuance of this summons, Humphrey de Bohun Earl of Hereford and Essex, and Constable of England, received the proffers of service at Carlisle, which, according to the established usage, were entered upon the rolls of the Mareshalcy. The roll, though entitled as of the Morrow of St. John the Baptist, contains notices of the appearances of the military tenants, by themselves or their substitutes, from the 15th June to the 2d July. One hundred and ninety-eight military tenants appeared, either by themselves or their deputies. And these, and the service sent by them in proportion to their tenancy, must have formed the nucleus of the army of Edward I. in this campaign.

Upon this offer they assembled, and debated the matter three times. But before they had completed their deliberations, the Earl of Warrenne had departed to England, and Sir John de Segrave had fallen sick, and many others could stop no longer, their presence being wanted in their own countries. Those who remained, seeing that they could not hastily determine the matter, prayed the King that the settlement of the business might be postponed, until his next Parliament of England, in such manner, nevertheless, that if any of the parties named in the roll should in the mean time beg or pray the King for any wardship, bailiwick, or franchise, and he in the mean time should grant it, that then he should be exonerated from doing more. But that as to the others, a settlement should finally be made in such Parliament. (p. 275, postea. § 46.)

LETTER ADDRESSED TO THE POPE BY THE EARLS AND BARONS OR MAGNATES ASSEMBLED IN THE PARLIAMENT AT LINCOLN.

Letter to the Pope by the Earls and Barons assembled in the Parliament at Lincoln, 1301.

XIV. The learned in the law and others of the Council were specially summoned to the Parliament at Lincoln, on the octaves of St. Hilary, 29 Ed. I., for the purpose of advising on the rights of the Crown and of the King's predecessors to the dominion of Scotland. And the two Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, were respectively required to send,—the first, as the larger and more antient body,—four or five,—and the second,—two or three, of their more discreet members, skilled in the written or civil law, also to advise thereon. And the principal Abbeys and Religious Houses were, as before, required to search their archives for historical matter relating to the Kingdom of Scotland.

graphic and literary illustrations have rendered it one of the most curious heraldic works which we possess.

Parl. Writs, vol. i. p. 102, 103. Nos. 42, 43.

Letter probably suggested by similar appeals and protests of the French barons.

The result of this proceeding was the memorable letter addressed to Pope Boniface VIII. by the Earls, Barons, and Magnates, assembled in the Parliament at Lincoln as before mentioned, and to which they set their seals, in the name of the whole Community of the Kingdom, protesting against the interference of the Papal see in the temporal concerns of another Sovereign. Such protests were no novelty in this age. Similar letters had been addressed to the Court of Rome by the Barons of France; and, that this instrument was suggested by these precedents appears, amongst other reasons, from the circumstance that each of the Barons adds a territorial designation to his name, a style found in the continental documents of the like nature, but new and strange in England.

Antient Kalendars, vol. i. p. 132. No. XL.

Originals in the Treasury never transmitted to Rome.

Two originals of this document are still in the Treasury, and we find, from an entry in Bishop Stapleton's Kalendar, that though intended to be sent, they were never actually dispatched. Amongst other conjectures to which this fact may give rise, it is difficult to resist the inference that Edward intended this manifesto at least as much as an appeal to the public mind at home, as an appeal from the Apostolic authority.

French or Romance translation of the Latin letter. Its value as a contemporary exposition.

Besides these originals, there is in the Treasury a translation into French, which is printed on account of the contemporary explanation which it affords of the phraseology of the original. The original letter, denying the jurisdiction of the Church of Rome over the temporal dominion of Scotland, proceeds, "Quinimò "idem Regnum Scotiæ progenitoribus "prædicti Domini nostri Regibus Angliæ, "atque sibi, feodale extitit ab antiquo," &c.; a phrase rendered by modern writers as importing that "it was an antient fief "of the Crown and Kings of England;" —This expression would lead to the conclusion that Edward intended to employ the terminology of the feudal law as appearing in the books of the continental jurists. But the French or Romance version, shows how the expression was understood by contemporaries:—"Mais "même le Royaume d'Ecosse aux aun-"cêtres le dit (i. e. du dit) notre Seig-"neur Rois d'Engleterre, et a lui, a esté "feable d'auncienneté." (p. 232, postea.) "Feeable" implies little more than dependant or tributary. It must never be forgotten, in considering the perplexed question of the homage, that those modern writers who advocate the Scottish side, argue against the validity of the English claims, because they do not find the English supremacy connected with a strict feudal tenure. Whereas the English advocate must assert the claim upon the ground, that the dominion was one of a peculiar nature, a special tenure, arising out of the antient dependance of the Scottish Regulus upon the Anglo-Saxon Bretwald, Basileus, or Emperor, and not to be cramped by arguments drawn from a later jurisprudence.

XV. In 1301 a treaty was concluded at Asnieres, between France and England, whereby a truce was granted to the Scots, the same to endure until the feast of St. Andrew 1302. The Ambassadors or "Messagers," as they were then called, were the Bishop of Chester, the Earl of Lincoln, the Archdeacon of Richmond, and John de Berwick, Canon of York, on the part of the King of England: and the Count of St. Pol, the Count of Dreux, Monsieur Hugh de Bonville, and Monsieur Pierre Flotte, Knights, on the part of Philip King of France. Pierre Flotte was a councillor of no ordinary talent. He took a very prominent part in the disputes with Pope Boniface; and, without doubt, was selected on this difficult occasion in consequence of his well known talent and ability.

Original draft or protocol thereof.

The treaty, as finally concluded, has been published by Rymer from an enrolment on the Almain Roll, though not with entire fidelity. But, in our Treasury is preserved the original draft or protocol as it was altered and settled by the Ambassadors; together with a fair copy of the document.

Fœdera, vol. i. p. 937.

p. 241, postea. No. CXXI.

The last article of the treaty is to the effect, that although the people of the King of France give the title of King o Scots to John Balliol, and maintain that he and the Scots are allies of the King of France, yet the Ambassadors of the King of England maintain the contrary, and call him only John Balliol, and say that he is not King of Scots, and not included in the French alliance. This was added by the English Ambassadors, and was admitted into the treaty accordingly.

Diplomatic note, for the purpose of showing that the Scots were not treated as allies of France.

The salvo, however, was not thought sufficient: and, at a subsequent stage, a very elaborate diplomatic note was prepared for the purpose of showing by various arguments, that the Scots were not included in the French alliances. The chief of these arguments, and which is urged with great ability, is this, that alliances made against common right, against sound morals (contre bons mœurs), and against oaths of fidelity and allegiance (p. 251, postea. § 4.) are void. And further reasons are adduced, and with great cleverness and acuteness, to show that the Scots were excluded from the benefit of the truce granted to the King of France and his allies; and that such their character of allies had not been in any respect conceded or allowed. (p. 254–258, postea. § 11–20.)

p. 250, postea. No. CXXIII.

Other diplomatic documents are the credentials, not hitherto published, to Jean de l'Hôpital and Gobert de Helleville, and upon which a safe conduct was granted to the Scottish party (Rymer, i. p. 942.): and a better and more authentic copy than that given by Rymer (Vol. i. p. 924.) of the writs issued at an earlier period, for the due observance of the truce granted by the King.

SUBMISSION OF COMYN AND HIS ADHERENTS TO EDWARD I.

Submission of Comyn and his adherents to Edward I.

Feb. to Oct. 1304.

XVI. After the capture of Dunfermline, negotiations took place between Comyn and his adherents and Edward I. for their "obtaining the King's peace," and for their submission to an authority which, according to the laws of nations, might be considered as fully and legitimately established. In these negotiations, special relation was had to the individuals who, though more obstinate than the rest in their resistance, the King of England had nevertheless reserved for what we must confess to be more signal equity rather than punishment. To all these persons, then, certain terms more or less merciful are held out, on accepting which Edward guaranteed to them their lives and liberty; and the result was a treaty.

Notes and proposals which passed during the treaty.

The treaty and ratification have been long since printed. Not so the notes and proposals, which passed and were made pending the negotiations. These were found in the Treasury in a state of great decay. They are extremely curious as showing by what steps the negotiations proceeded: how carefully, and we may add, how kindly, each case was considered by the ascendant party.

Submission of Comyn and his adherents to Edward I.

p. 278, postea. No. CXXVIII.

In an undated note, which, inasmuch as it provides for the cases of those who, yet holding out against the King were willing to come in to his peace "between now "and Candlemas," must have passed at rather an early stage of the proceedings, it is granted that those who will so submit, shall be saved harmless in life and limb, and quit of imprisonment, and shall not be disinherited. Provided nevertheless, that they shall put themselves in the ordinance of the King concerning their ransom, and the reparations to be made for the trespasses which they have committed against him. And upon such terms, the Prince has full power to receive them, save and except Sir Simon Fraser, Sir David Graham, and Thomas du Bois, every one according to his condition, because they are of a different sort from the rest. The King wishes it to be known, that he will be more favourable to those who will seek his peace without Comyn, than to those who will only surrender amongst his followers.

Furthermore, concerning Sir John Comyn and Sir John Mowbray, who have exerted themselves more than the others to trouble and hurt our Lord the King, for which reason they ought to humble themselves the more, it does not appear to the King that they should be received upon the conditions which they demand. But, if they, by themselves or by their friends, will prefer such requests to the King as may be granted consistently with his honour and the honour of his Kingdom, they shall be willingly heard by him. —Surely,—no answer more gracious could possibly have been returned.

Edward's clemency.

Another note contains the conditions which the King grants to those who, being in the company of John Comyn, are willing to surrender before the 16th of the then instant February, a date which fixes this document as subsequent to the preceding. They are saved harmless in life and limb; they are to be quit of imprisonment, and shall not be disinherited. But, nevertheless, upon condition that they shall submit to the King's ordinances as to their ransom, make amends for the tres-

Treaty with Comyn, how negotiated.

On "Wednesday," which, from the context, seems to have been Wednesday the 4th day of February 1304, a meeting was held between the Earl of Ulster and other the King's Ambassadors, on the one part, and Sir John Comyn on the other. Comyn treated, as he declared, for all those for whom he was bound, whether by oath or other security.

It had been proposed (p. 280, postea. No. CXXX. § 2.) for Comyn that he should be safe in life and limb, that he should be free from imprisonment, that he should be fully exonerated and released from the consequences of his acts against the King. No ransom was to be exacted from him: he was to retain the lands of his antient inheritance; and all this upon the condition that he should, for one year, banish himself from Scotland. And now, Comyn, out of the respect and honour which he bears to the King, and the more to obtain his good will, submits himself, as to his lands and all the matters aforesaid, to the King's grace and will, so as, nevertheless, that he be not imprisoned.

Submission of Comyn and his adherents to Edward I.

And he will undergo banishment, as suggested by the King: and he declares that without the full assent of his liege Lord he would not wish to hold land or any other thing.

Four persons excepted from this amnesty.

Furthermore, as to the people of Scotland, excepting four, who are therein-after named, it is proposed that life and limb shall be saved to them, that they shall be exonerated from imprisonment, and that they shall not be disinherited; so, nevertheless, that as concerning their ransom and further amends to be made for their trespasses against the King, they shall submit to his ordinance. Heirs within age are to enjoy the same amnesty, but shall abide, as to their ransom and all other conditions, by such orders as the King shall make thereupon in his next Parliament; and all prisoners on both sides shall be delivered, save and except Sir Herbert de Morham and his father. (p. 280, postea. No. CXXX. § 3.)

The four persons thus excepted are, the Stewart of Scotland, Sir John Soules, Sir Simon Fraser, and Thomas du Bois. With respect to the two first, it is proposed that they shall be banished from Scotland for two years, and to some place South of Trent; the castles of the Stewart to continue in the King's hands during his exile, and the guard thereof to be provided for at his expence. And as for Sir Simon Fraser and Thomas du Bois, it is provided that they shall be exiled for three years, as well out of the dominions of the King of England as of the King of France, unless they find grace in the meanwhile. (p. 281, postea. No. CXXX. § 4, 5.)

Submission of Comyn and his adherents to Edward I.

All these propositions were reduced into writing, and being sealed with the seals of the Ambassadors then being at Perth, (p. 283, postea. § 1.) were, on Thursday the morrow of St. Agatha, 5 Feb. 1304, transmitted to the King by the hands of Sir Ralph Fitz Pain, — "who will more "clearly declare the matters, as he knows "them all:" A general reference is made to the ample oral information which he will be able to afford: and they pray the King that he will send them back his intentions by Sir Robert Fitz Pain before vespers, on Saturday then next. As further instructions for Sir Robert, he was to remember that if these terms were granted, he was to bring with him letters of safe conduct for Comyn and his party, enabling him to visit Dunfermlyn, stay there and return, the same to last until the 20th

1304. of the then present month of February (p. 281, postea. No. CXXX. § 6. p. 282, postea, No. CXXXI. § 1.); and at the same time, a further list of memoranda was given to Fitz Pain of the matters which he was to transact, and which still exists in the shape of a small membrane tacked to the duplicate of the proposals. (p. 283, postea. No. CXXXI. § 2–6.)

An undated instrument, contains the terms and conditions which, according to the indorsement, were granted to Sir John Comyn, and the other men of Scotland when they surrendered themselves to the peace of the King. p. 286, postea. No. CXXXIII.

Stipulations in favour of Comyn and his partisans.

In the first place it is stipulated, that they should be saved free in life and limb, without being liable to any imprisonment, together with all their lands, tenements, fees, inheritances, homages, and all their goods, moveable and immoveable, together with their appurtenances, in England, Scotland, and Ireland, to them and their heirs, and which they possess or own, whether by descent, inheritance, or purchase, or in any other manner, in such guise as if they or their ancestors had in no respect offended (p. 286, postea. § 1.);

and that all trespasses and crimes which they have committed against the King, or against any other, whether in England, Scotland, or elsewhere, whether by sea or by land, should be entirely released and pardoned: and that they should not be answerable thenceforward to any one in any Court, nor for any action or demand in relation to the incidents of tenure, or any other cause of action, save and except debts due upon pledge or written security. (p. 286, postea. § 2.)

Furthermore, that they were to be preserved in the enjoyment of all their laws, usages, franchises, and customs, in all points as they were in the days of King Alexander. If there be any law which requires amendment, let it be done by the King's advice, and by the assent and advice of the good people of the land: and the "ranzon" of lands is to be in the discretion of the King, so as that they be not more burthened than those who have preceded them. And no ordinance hereafter to be made by King and Council concerning the Kingdom of Scotland, or its inhabitants, shall prejudice the persons by whom these conditions are demanded. (p. 287, postea. § 3.)

Special requests made by Sir John Comyn.

Sir John Comyn makes a special request; that the King will be pleased to grant to him and to Sir John Mowbray the lands which King John gave to them and to their fathers before the beginning of the war. But as to the lands which King John gave to Sir John Comyn when he dubbed him a Knight, let them be in the will of the King of England.

Comyn moreover prays, that he and Sir John Mowbray may be discharged of all ransoms for their bodies or for their lands, and of all reliefs and matters of account, as before is mentioned; and that they shall not be called upon to give hostages nor any other surety, save and except homage and fealty, for any past trespass, unless it should be some open and evident trespass, and such as may plainly demand further surety: and if the King of France, or the Ambassadors from England or Scotland, have agreed upon any settled course, let it be in their will to adhere to the same, or in such other manner as is here proposed. And for all these matters they require reasonable surety from the King, and from his son the Prince, and from the Baronage, by writing sealed by their seals, and by oath. (p. 287, 288, postea. § 4, 5, 6.) The indorsement upon the one part of this treaty (for there are two parts) has been already noticed; that upon the other part is more full, describing it as containing the terms made upon the submission of Sir John Comyn and his adherents to the peace of the King, and in which the Prince of Wales, the King's son, had concurred. (p. 288, postea.)

Submission of Comyn and his adherents to Edward I.

p. 283, postea. No. CXXXII.

One document more of this class, remains to be noticed: it contains instructions or conditions upon various matters from or required by the King. With respect to the fortresses which are to continue in the King's hands until the next Parliament, it is the King's intention that they shall be kept or garrisoned at the charges of those to whom they belong. (p. 283, postea. § 1.)

As to the Bishop of Glasgow, on account of the great harms which he hath done, the King desires that he shall be banished from Scotland for two or three years. (p. 284, postea. § 2.)

mand: — "Le Roi entent que il soit receu "a sa volenté et a son ordeinement." (p. 284, postea. § 3.) This, unquestionably was requiring him to surrender at discretion: but I cannot find any convincing reason for the assertion; "that such a "surrender, it is well known, gave Edward "the unquestionable right of ordering "his victim to instant execution." — It was the King's wish that Sir David Graham should have some "penance," because he conducted himself so falsely in the meetings which he had with the members of the King's Council. (p. 284, postea. § 4.) After this declaration a severe punishment might have been reasonably expected: the King imposes exile beyond the Tweed, or in England, for half a year.

It was also the King's wish that Sir Alexander Lyndesey should have some heavier "penance" than the rest, on account of his having abandoned the King, from whom he had received the honour of knighthood. (p. 284, postea. § 5.)

The King commands that the Prince shall conduct with him the Earls of Lancaster, Ulster, and Warwick, Sir John de Bretaigne, Sir Hugh le Despenser, Sir Robert de Clifford, Sir William de Laybourne, Sir Alexander Abernethy, and Sir Richard Seward, and that the Earls of Strathern and Menteith should also be commanded to meet the Prince upon the day when he should come to Dunfermline. The Prince is to leave Perth well fortified, and in nowise to depart thence until the town should be so well secured that it can neither be surprised nor in peril, and that the labourers may work there in security until his return. (p. 284, postea. § 6.)

Perth to be fortified.

With respect to the assurance or obligation to be entered into by the King's Ambassadors, they shall give their letters patent, sealed with their seals, in such manner as they shall deem most expedient, for the observance of the conditions, as the same have been discussed and granted. And when Sir John Comyn shall have performed homage and fealty to the King, and done all he is bound to do, the King himself will grant him his letters patent, sealed with his great seal, for the observance of all the conditions, as the same have been discussed and granted, according to the purport of the writing which the Ambassadors shall have made, as before is mentioned. (p. 285, postea. § 7.)

And lastly, the King releases and discharges all balances due in respect of ransoms; and declares that all hostages shall be given up on either side.

It is probable that other indentures or notes passed during these negotiations, inasmuch as the terms do not entirely agree with the treaty concluded at Strathord, 9th February 32 Ed. I., and ratified by the King, 15th Oct. 33 Ed. I.: amongst other variations, it is in that treaty distinctly left to Wallace, that he may come in to the King's grace, if he will.*

Lord Hailes says, "there may seem to be an ambiguity in the "last words; they may relate either to Wallace or Ed-"ward." But this ambiguity is removed by a parallel passage a few lines lower down:—"Derechef est ac-"cordé, que les Evêques de Seint Andreu et de Dun-"keldyn &c. veignent à la pais notre Seigneur le Roi "avantdit dedens la quinzaine de Pasque prochein, si leur "semble que bon soit."

XVII. Edward carried his promises into full effect, by issuing writs for the restoration of the lands of the Earl of Buchan (§ 1, 15.), of Roger Comyn (§ 16.), and other of his adherents. And, in like manner, for the restoration of the temporalities of the Bishop of St. Andrew's. The writs are not extant: but the information is gained from the dockets. The writs in favour of the Bishop, state that his temporal possessions had been so seized on account of his disobedience, and that they are now restored to him.

MEMORANDA OF BUSINESS TRANSACTED BEFORE THE COUNCIL, IN OR OUT OF PARLIAMENT.

Memoranda of business transacted before the Council, &c.

XVIII. Among the Scottish documents were found several small "pannels," as they were technically termed, containing memoranda of business transacted before the Council or in Parliament; most of them are written in a very hasty manner, and jotted down by the Clerk. And it is very interesting to be admitted, as it were, in this manner, into the private chamber and secret deliberations of the Sovereign.

In October 1302, the Count of Savoy, the Earl of Lincoln, Sir Aymer de Valence, Sir Otho de Grauntson, Sir Amaneu de Labret, Master William de Grenefeld the Chancellor, and Master Robert de Pykering, were dispatched as Ambassadors to the Court of France upon the affairs of Scotland. It appears from the first of these pannels that they were sworn in Parliament, together with others who were appointed to treat on the affairs of Scotland. And the pannel further contains the names of others appointed to treat on the same affairs. p. 236, postea. No. CXIX.

Appointment of John de Britannia as the King's Lieutenant in Scotland.

Another of these documents is the minute appointing John de Britannia to be the King's Lieutenant in Scotland: he is to have the command of the castles of Roxburgh and Jedworth, and shall appoint the Sheriff of Roxburgh and the Constables of the same Castles, such as he shall see will be sufficient, and for whom he will answer; and he shall have in his company sixty men-at-arms. In order the better to maintain his state and such retenance, and for the garrison of such Castles, and for "putting the Sheriff in Roxburgh," he shall have two thousand marks per annum, to be paid by the hands of the Chamberlain of Scotland, out of the issues of the Kingdom of Scotland. The year of his retainer is to begin from Candlemas then next ensuing, and from the time when he enters Scotland his pay shall be reckoned. And, inasmuch as Sir John de Britannia, by the King's permission, wishes to retain with him Sir Brian Fitz Alan, it is agreed that the Bishop of St. Andrew's and the same Brian Fitz Alan shall be Guardians of Scotland, in the place of the same John, until his arrival in Scotland. By patent issued shortly afterwards, the office was actually conferred upon him; but it does not contain the particulars which we collect from the minute, as to the manner in which the office was to be held.

The King's Council for Scotland.

The minute (p. 292, postea. § 2.) proceeds to give the names of those who were to be sworn as the King's Council in Scotland, and the Lieutenant is to call them to him, together with the Chancellor and the Chamberlain, and the other Justices and Ministers of the Kingdom, in order to act by their counsel and advice, whenever the same shall be required.

The names of the Council follow:—the Bishops of St. Andrew's, Dunkeld, Aberdeen, and Rosse;—the Abbots of Melrose, Coupar, Jedworth, and Dunfermline; the Earls of March, Buchan, Carrick, Athol, and Rosse;—and, lastly, Sir John Comyn, Sir John de Mowbray, Sir Alexander de Argyle, Sir John Menteith, Sir Duncan de Ferndraght, Sir Adam de Gordon, and Sir John de Inchmartyn. Upon what grounds modern historians charge Edward with bad faith and dissimulation in these transactions, and that whilst he "affected to disclaim all violent or capri-"cious innovations," he, "in effect, took "especial care that all that really marked

His directions for the impartial administration of the law, &c.

How, for example, can we discern any tokens of the imputed dissimulation, in the Ordinance which declares that the King will name Justices and other officers in Scotland, who shall administer the law impartially in Scotland between poor and rich and between rich and poor (p. 295, postea. § 1.); or, in the further Order, that all those who have not yet come into the King's peace, and who are fugitives, shall be summoned to appear in Parliament, and that, failing to do so, they are to be banished as the King shall be advised. (p. 296, postea. § 7.)

This instrument contains other memoranda of business to be done:—castles and fortresses to be put in safe hands;—ports and sea shores to be well guarded (p. 296, postea. § 6.); the issues and profits of the Realm better collected than they have been heretofore (p. 296, postea. § 5.); —due honour to be rendered to St. Cuthbert and St. John of Beverley (p. 296, postea. § 2.);—due guerdon to be made to the King's lieges who have served him, so as that they may be reasonably satisfied. (p. 296, postea. § 3.)

Rewards to those who had assisted in the capture of Wallace, &c.

A small parchment, containing a hasty set of memoranda, exhibits some very curious particulars: forty marks to be given to the vallet who spied out William Wallace: also concerning the sixty marks to be given to the others who were present at his capture: and it is the King's intention that they shall divide the money between them. (§ 4, 5.) To these memoranda succeeds the following — " de la " terre, c'est a savoir, cent livres, pour " Johan de Meneteth" (§ 1.); short and abrupt as this memorandum is, we can have but little difficulty in adopting the explanation which it receives from the context, namely, that it was Menteith's share of the reward.

p. 295, postea. No. CXXXVII.

Another parchment containing memoranda of the same description, but unfortunately very much mutilated, equally tantalizes us by glancing at important particulars: — to receive from Sir Henry Percy the writings found in the castle of " Lochenden " (p. 294, postea. § 5.); and letters to be addressed to William Biset, to cause the individual to come who first brought intelligence, concerning Robert Bruce. Indenture containing the particulars of the military arrangements adopted for the defence of Galloway.

The King tenders the state of the people of Galloway beyond the "water of Creth," and therefore, in order to save and defend them from the enemy, it is agreed that the Earl of Buchan, Sir John de St. John, and Sir Ingelram de Umfraville shall continue in those parts with twenty men-at-arms each; Sir Alexander Balliol with ten men-at-arms; and twenty to be provided by the community of Galloway. But the King will pay their expences, and they are to ride with the other troops for the defence of the country and in acting against the enemy. (p. 297, postea. § 1.) Besides these forces, the men of Galloway beyond "Creth" are to find one thousand foot soldiers, who are to be always ready to accompany the men-at-arms upon being duly warned or summoned by the Earl of Buchan, and when they are called out, they shall receive the King's pay; but when they are not so out, they are not to be entitled to such pay, save as to eighty, who are to patrol the country, receiving twopence per diem.

One part of this agreement, which is regularly made by indenture, was delivered to William de la Rue, Clerk, and such of the men of Galloway as wish for it, may have a transcript of the same. (p. 298. postea. § 4.)

Correspondence, &c. relating to the rising of the Bruce.

the power of their enemies, entered into such bond of alliance as is therein expressed; to wit, — That they should mutually help each other in all their several businesses and affairs, at all times and against all other persons whatsoever, without any deceit; and that neither of them should undertake any important business without the consent of the other of them. — They will mutually warn each other against any impending danger, and do their best to avert the same from each other. — And for the full performance of the agreement, they bind themselves by oath, and under penalty of the sum of ten thousand pounds, to be applied for the recovery of the Holy Land.

Correspondence, &c. relating to the rising of the Bruce.

The part of the indenture to which the seal of the Bishop was affixed, was produced to him at Newcastle upon Tyne, 9 August 1306, in the presence of witnesses, to wit, John de Sandale, Robert de Cottingham, John de Winchester, and John de Sheffield, Clerks, and John de Herlaston, Notary Public, admitted by Imperial authority; and he was asked if he had any thing to say against the authenticity of the instrument:

Was the seal his?—It was.

Correspondence, &c. relating to the rising of the Bruce.

Was the purport of the writing his deed? —It was.

And a notarial act was drawn up of the proceedings, testifying that the Notary had been present with the witnesses, and that the copy of the indenture inserted and contained in such act, had been most carefully collated and compared with the original.

Bishop Lamberton's submission, in which he offers to clear himself from any participation in the death of Comyn.

Not less curious, is the instrument of submission, dated at "the Fountain of "Scotland, 9 June 34 Ed. I.," in which the Bishop urgently offers to defend himself, in any way which the King or Council may devise, against the charge of having incurred any kind of guilt in the death of Sir John Comyn or of Sir Robert his uncle, or in relation to the war then begun.

And as to the death of Comyn, the Bishop will clear himself, or make his peace, as well with Comyn's kin or lineage as with the King; and if he cannot do so, he is willing to submit to the King's will as one attainted. Memorial presented by Malise Earl of Strathern.

A memorial presented, as it should seem, to the King and Council by Malise Earl of Strathern, is extremely interesting, as showing the force and duresse exercised by the Bruce, against or upon all who dared to adhere to their sworn allegiance.

As soon as Sir Robert Bruce was made King, he sent, on the following Monday, letters of credence to the Earl of Strathern, by the Abbot of Inchaffrayn. The Prelate urged the Earl to repair forthwith to Sir Robert, and perform homage and fealty. "Nay,"—answers the Earl,—"I have "nothing to do with him."—Upon this reply, Bruce and the Earl of Athol, raising all their power, entered Strathern, and having occupied Foulis, Bruce sent a second letter of safe conduct to the Earl, upon the faith of which the Earl stationed himself in the wood of "Creff," where his people were assembled. And when the Earl counselled with his own people, they advised him to go to Bruce, and treat with him; inasmuch as he had letters of safe conduct. The Earl then, for the purpose of saving his lands, and eschewing greater danger of his own body, and of his life, agreed to this counsel, and repaired to Bruce accordingly.

Bruce insists that the Earl shall acknowledge him as King.

Bruce made a peremptory demand that the Earl should forthwith acknowledge him as King, by the performance of fealty and homage. The Earl strongly represented that he had not come for any such purpose, and prayed that he might be permitted to depart, according to the purport of his safe conduct. A second meeting took place on the Moothill (p. 320, postea.), and there came the Earl of Athol and urged the Earl of Strathern to make the desired acknowledgment. "Nay,"—replied he,—"I would not that my faith "should be as frail as yours."—Athol upon this waxed wroth, and advised his King, the Bruce, to break the promise given by the letters of safe conduct, and to place the Earl of Strathern in the custody of Sir Niel Campbell and Sir Walter de Logan, whilst he, Athol, sent his men to destroy and ravage the country. In such manner was the Earl taken, and conducted to "Inchemecolmock," but when he came there, still he would not perform homage. Here he found Sir Robert Boyd, who advised Bruce to grant away the lands of Strathern, and to behead him, the Earl, and to do the like to all who grudged the required homage: and when the Earl of Strathern heard this he was frightened, as well he might be, and did their will, and then they let him go. Strathern then alleges other facts to show how unwillingly he rendered his obedience, and that he had acted entirely under duress, and without guile or fraud. (p. 321, postea.)

Boyd advises Bruce to cut off the Earl's head.

SEQUESTRATION OF THE ECCLESIASTICAL PREFERMENT OF WILLIAM COMYN BY BISHOP LAMBERTON.

p. 327, postea. No. CXLVII.

XX. When the Bishop of St. Andrew's came over to Bruce, he used every exertion to help his party by and through his ecclesiastical authority. Hence, he issued a commission of sequestration against the preferment of Master William Comyn, Provost of the Church of St. Mary, in the city of St. Andrew's, and Rector of the Church of "Syres," in the same city.

Sequestration of the Ecclesiastical Preferment of William Comyn by Bishop Lamberton.

Such sequestration was to continue in force until the Provost should come in to the faith of the King of Scotland.

16 Apr. 1306. This document, dated on Saturday next after the feast of Tiburcius and Valerian, 1306, and which exists in the original, was carefully examined and exemplified by one of the public notaries usually employed by the King, such exemplification being made at Newburgh in Tyndale, 18th August 1306.

ARTICLES AND ACCUSATIONS PROPOUNDED BEFORE THE POPE BY EDWARD I. AGAINST THE SCOTTISH PRELATES WHO HAD REBELLED AGAINST HIM.

Articles, &c. propounded by Edward I. against the Scottish Prelates, &c.

XXI. Few of Edward's opponents incurred more of his displeasure than the Prelates of Scotland, who had broken that religious compact which they should have been the first to reverence and obey. Tytler's Scotland, vol. i. p. 247. Rymer, I. p. 999.

Ambassadors dispatched to the Papal Court with complaints against the Bishops of St. Andrew's and Glasgow.

Shortly after the capture of William Lamberton Bishop of St. Andrew's, and Robert Wisheart Bishop of Glasgow, the King dispatched his ambassadors, and addressed his letters to the Supreme Pontiff, Sept. & Oct. 1306.

praying that on account of their manifold acts of treachery and rebellion they might be removed from their sees, and other Prelates appointed in their stead. To the Diocese of St. Andrew's, Edward requested that William Comyn might be appointed, the brother of the late Earl of Buchan, who having been duly chosen to the Bishoprick, had been prevented from obtaining his dignity by the intrusion of Lamberton and his accomplices; a token of the dissensions between Lamberton and the Comyns, which probably induced the former to be so forward in denying any participation in the death of John Comyn.

Articles, &c. propounded by Edward I. against the Scottish Prelates, &c.

To the Bishoprick of Glasgow, Edward recommends Geoffry de Mowbray, a man of good descent and honest conversation: and, by such appointments, the King trusts that the Church will be well served, and the peace of Scotland maintained.

The credentials and letter have been long since printed: but we are now able to produce the articles propounded to the Pope in support of the allegations, and which are highly curious as affording a clear view of the characters of the parties, as well as of the transactions in which they were engaged.*

Articles propounded before the Pope against Bishop Lamberton.

The articles propounded against Bishop Lamberton, open with the allegations that when he was yet Chancellor of Glasgow, he, of his own free will, appeared at the Parliament at Berwick upon Tweed, the 28th August 1296, and there did fealty to the King as his rightful liege Lord, confirming such fealty by instrument under his seal, and by oath upon the Consecrated Host, upon the Gospels, upon the Cross of St. Neot, and upon the Black Rood of Scotland. (p. 331, postea. § 2.)

p. 331, postea. No. CXLIX.

Lamberton's fealty at Berwick.

The people of Scotland, by the abetment and procurement of the Prelates and Clerks of the land, having rebelled against the King, under the guidance of William Wallace, their chieftain and leader, Lamberton forthwith adhered to him. At this juncture, the Chapter of St. Andrew's had duly elected Master William Comyn, a good man and true, and

Wallace and his party compel the Chapter of St. Andrew's who was always faithful to the King, but William Wallace and his party, by force and duresse, compelled the Chapter to elect Lamberton in his stead, who thus entered upon the temporalties of the see. (p. 331, postea. § 3.)

to rescind the election of William Comyn, and to elect Lamberton in his stead.

Being thus made Bishop, Lamberton continued at the Court of France, together with other of the Great men of Scotland, the King's enemies, labouring continually to do all the harm and injury in his power against his liege Lord, until the peace was finally concluded between France and England. And after the conclusion of such treaty, he, Lamberton, by letters patent under his seal, urged and excited the Prelates, Earls, Barons, and all the Commonalty of Scotland, then being the King's enemies, to carry on the war vigorously, until the Bishop and the other Lords in France could return to Scotland. And this did he, in open violation of his oath, as was notorious and well known. (p. 332, postea. § 4, 5.)

Bishop Lamberton being at the court of France excites the Prelates and others of Scotland to rebellion.

Moreover, the Bishop addressed his special letters, sealed with his seal, to the traitor Wallace: and prayed that for the love of him the Bishop, he Wallace would do all possible hurt and damage to the King of England. And Lamberton also wrote to his officers in Scotland, to employ a portion of his own provision for the sustenance of Wallace. And this also did the Bishop against his oath and fealty, as is well known both in England and in Scotland. (p. 333, postea. § 6.)

The King's enemies being defeated, Lamberton changes sides, takes the oath of fealty again to the King, receives back his temporalties, &c.

But what did the Bishop of St. Andrew's do, after the King had defeated his rebellious subjects of Scotland, and when they all submitted themselves entirely and unconditionally to his grace and favour, for such their trespasses and offences? —Why, of his own unconstrained good will, no one compelling, did he repair to the King of England, at Stirling, 4th May 1304, and again he performed his fealty to the King, as to his liege Lord and rightful King of Scotland, and then and there he received back his temporalties by the special grace of the King, to hold of the King and his heirs, Kings of England, as of him whom the Bishop, by word of mouth and by writing under his seal, acknowledged to be his liege Lord, and the rightful King and Lord of all Scotland. And, even as before, the Bishop took his oath upon the Consecrated Host, and upon the Gospels, and upon the Cross of St. Neot, and the Black Rood of Scotland, to be true and faithful to the King and his heirs for ever. (p. 334, postea. § 7.)

Articles, &c. propounded by Edward I. against the Scottish Prelates, &c.

The Bishop, after fealty performed, admitted that he had intruded himself upon the temporalties of the See without the King's licence, and for which trespass he fully submitted himself to the King's will, offering and binding himself to answer for the issues and profits thereof, whenever he should be called to account for the same. (p. 334, postea. § 8.) This liability does not appear to have been enforced, and the Bishop was entirely and unreservedly taken into the confidence of the King. He was appointed one of the King's Council, and he was also nominated as head or chief of the Guardians appointed to rule the Land, and to maintain peace and good order therein. In execution of this power, he was to act according to the ordinance made in the presence of the Bishop and by his assent: an ordinance by which justices and other officers, well qualified by their knowledge of the law, were appointed to maintain good order in the Land.

Confidence reposed by Edward I. in Bishop Lamberton; he is appointed chief of the Royal Lieutenants or Governors.

Lamberton changes sides again, and steals off to Bruce.

Thus implicitly trusted by the King, the Bishop was privy to all the plots of Bruce. And having assisted at the Council held at Berwick, summoned to advise upon the measures to be adopted in consequence of the rising of the Bruce, and the murder and sacrilege committed by him, he stole off by night to Scone, to do honour to Bruce, when, causing himself to be crowned, he assumed the title of King of Scotland. Lamberton, it is further alleged, continued to adhere to Bruce with all his power, and assented to all Bruce's acts of treason, in entire contravention of his oaths and obligations. And, in proof of this charge, the articles refer to a solemn inquest taken at Berwick upon Tweed by the Great Lords of Scotland, and sealed with their seals: and authenticated by instrument under the hand of a Notary Public or Tabellion. (p. 334, 335, postea. § 8, 9.)

Lamberton treacherously places the son and heir of the Stewart (who had been given as a hostage by his father) in the power of the Bruce.

Signal also was the treachery of the Bishop, in relation to the trust reposed in him by the King, with respect to Andrew the son and heir of the Stewart of Scotland. The youth, given as a hostage by his father, having been placed under the care of the Bishop, the King commanded him by his letters to bring the said Andrew, to Berwick, and deliver him to the Chamberlain of Scotland. But, instead of rendering obedience, the Bishop evaded delivering Andrew, until he, the Bishop, joined the Bruce, and then he gave him to Bruce, who yet retains him against his father's will. (p. 336, postea. § 10.) And all these things are so notorious in Scotland and elsewhere, that they cannot be in any manner concealed or denied.

Articles, &c. propounded by Edward I. against the Scottish Prelates, &c.

An article is here added, containing the allegation, that, when the Bishop saw that the King's power was increasing in Scotland, and that the mad enterprize of the rebels could not endure: he forthwith surrendered himself to Sir Aymer de Valence, then commanding in these parts, and undertook to submit entirely to the King's will.

The King's power increasing, Lamberton changes sides again, surrenders himself to Sir Aymer de Valence, and takes another oath of fealty to the King: after which he changes sides again, and sends forces to the assistance of Bruce.

Having thus come in, he represented to Sir Aymer, that he wished to absent himself for a little while upon certain affairs of his Church, and that he would speedily return. Sir Aymer readily assented, and the Bishop took his oath upon the Gospels, thenceforward to be true and faithful to the King, and Sir Aymer let him go. The Bishop hastening away, forthwith assembled and collected his retainers, as many as he possibly could, horse and foot, and marched them to Bruce, who was preparing to attack Sir Aymer at Perth. And all such the Bishop's men were with Bruce, on the day when he fought. This without doubt was the battle, or rather the rout, of Methven; and the facts are fully proved, the instrument continues, by confessions and acknowledgments of the Bishop's retainers who were taken prisoners, and who openly certified that they had been so dispatched by him against the English army. And thus did the Bishop, in entire violation of the oath which he had so recently sworn to Sir Aymer, and against his fealty and the other oaths which he had previously taken to the King. And, notwithstanding the sin of perjury which he had committed, he hath sung mass, and otherwise administered the sacraments of Holy Church, and performed the duties which to his Office belong. (p. 337, postea. § 11.)

The Pope requested to punish such acts of perjury and treason.

The attention of the Pope is then particularly called to the extreme culpability of the Bishop in violating the confidence so implicitly reposed in him by the King, who thought that, as a Prelate of Holy Church, he might well put his trust in him. Less is the guilt of the Bishop of Glasgow, yet his Holiness has issued process against him — for which the King returns his affectionate thanks,—and it is therefore prayed, that the like process, or other process more severe, may issue against the Bishop, and that Master William Comyn may be appointed to the See. (p. 337–339, postea. § 11, 12, 13.)

Articles, &c. propounded by Edward I. against the Scottish Prelates, &c.

The articles close with the representation, that the King has the recovery of the Holy Land more at heart than any other earthly thing: but how can he undertake this voyage unless and until he hath pacified his dominions, and particularly until the disturbances and impediments which arise in Scotland, are removed, and of which the Bishops of St. Andrew's and of Glasgow, are the principal abettors and maintainers with all their power.

Therefore doth the King,— as earnestly as he can, and for the quiet and tranquillity of himself and his people, and that he may the better and more speedily attend to the affairs of the Holy Land, which, as before mentioned, he has so much at heart,—pray the Pope to afford such remedy as the urgency of the case requires.

Articles propounded against Wisheart Bishop of Glasgow.

In like manner, are detailed the misdeeds of Robert Wisheart Bishop of Glasgow, the same being similarly set forth in the articles propounded to his Holiness. p. 340, postea. No. CL.

Bishop Wisheart takes the oath of fealty for the first time,

When, after the death of King Alexander, Scotland came into the hands of the King of England, as Chief or Over-lord, until it could be decided in his Court who had the greater right to the same, the said Bishop took the oath that he would be faithful and true to the King, as Sovereign Lord of Scotland: as appears by a public instrument under the hand of a Tabellion. This was his first fealty: and thereupon, the King appointed the Bishop to be one of the guardians or keepers of the land, and for the preservation of the peace thereof, until it could be decided who was best entitled to the same. (p. 340, postea, § 2.)

and breaks his first oath, abetting

Judgment having been given in favour of Balliol, the Bishop, without hesitation or compunction, aided and abetted the new King in all his treasons. It was the Bishop who instigated Balliol to ally himself with the King of France, to which alliance the Bishop affixed his seal, as may be sufficiently shown by a public instrument containing a copy of the original. And then Balliol made war against the King, principally by the aid and assistance of the Bishop, who was continually helping and exciting Balliol to commit arsons, robberies, murders, and as many ravages as he possibly could in the English territory: all which matters are public and notorious as well in England as in Scotland. (p. 341, postea, § 3.)

Balliol in all his treasons.

Upon the submission of Balliol, the Bishop, unconstrained, and of his own free will, came to the King, at Elgyn in Murray, and humbly prayed forgiveness for his various trespasses and outrages: and he renounced every kind of alliance or confederacy with France against the King or Crown of England. And then again he took an oath, upon the Consecrated Host, upon the Gospels, upon the Cross of St. Neot, and upon the Black Rood of Scotland, that he would be faithful and true to the King and his heirs, and that he would never be in help or in council* when any thing should be moved or discussed which might turn to the damage or peril of the King or of his heirs, nor of the Kingdom of England; as appears by his letters patent, sealed with his seal, and by instrument thereupon made by a public notary. After this, in the King's Parliament held at Berwick, in the twenty-fourth year of his reign, wherein all the Great Men of Scotland were assembled, the Bishop openly and solemnly ratified and confirmed the fealty which he had made at Elgyn. Besides that, he, together with the Bishops of Aberdeen and Galloway, in the presence of the Great Men of Scotland, took the oath,—performed fealty for the third time—this and the oath at Elgyn being probably reckoned as one,—duly executed his letter spatent under his seal: and swore again upon the Consecrated Host, and upon the Gospels, and upon the Cross of St. Neot, and upon the Black Rood of Scotland, truly and faithfully and for ever to observe what he had promised, as appeared by such his letters patent, and by public instrument, certified as before by the Notary. (p. 342, 343, postea. § 4, 5.)

Articles, &c. propounded by Edward I. against the Scottish Prelates, &c.

After this, when the King, thinking, as he well might, that he had established his Kingdom of Scotland in peace, quitted England and crossed to Flanders,—What did the Bishop do? — Why, then the Bishop forthwith abetted Robert Bruce Earl of Carrick and William Wallace, and laboured so much that they, together with others, rose against the King and moved war against him.—The words of the original are clear and precise, and expressly charge the Bishop with being the prime instigator of the rebellion.

Bishop Wisheart takes advantage of the King's absence, breaks his second and third oaths, and instigates the rising of Bruce and Wallace.

Nor did he stop here, but arrayed in armour as a man of war, he came with all his people and all his forces into the field against the King, in aid of Bruce and Wallace, striving to do the utmost harm in his power.

At this juncture, Sir Henry Percy and Sir Robert Clifford, Chieftains commanding on the King's behalf, treated with the Bishop, and, Bruce's affairs appearing to decline, they easily prevailed upon the Bishop to surrender himself, and come into the King's peace, and to acknowledge, both by word of mouth and by letters sealed with his seal, that wickedly had he risen against his liege Lord the King of England. And concerning this and all the other evils which he had done, he submitted himself completely to the King, as appeared by such his letters, and by public instrument thereupon made. And this did the Bishop at Irwin in Scotland, the ninth day of July, in the twenty-fifth year of the reign of the King; and the Bishop became, in addition, one of the bail or mainpernors for Bruce's good behaviour. (p. 199, postea. No. CXX.)

Bishop Wisheart changes sides again and goes over to the Bruce.

Within less than a month afterwards, the Bishop had changed sides again, and confederating with the Bruce and Wallace, he broke his own engagements and broke theirs, and instigated them to rise again against the King as before.

Bishop Wisheart appears to change sides again, and surrenders himself to Edward.

Upon change of fortune, the Bishop, as usual, immediately changed sides, and when he saw the power of the King increase, he then repaired to Roxburgh, and surrendered himself as a hostage.—

Lord Hailes' remarks upon these transactions.

Lord Hailes comments in the following manner upon the transaction:—"The "Barons who had made the capitulation

"at Irvine had treated not only for themselves, but for their party; Wallace and his associates would not accede to the capitulation. The Bishop of Glasgow, who had negotiated the treaty, and Sir William Douglas, who had concurred in it, behaved with more honour than is generally to be found in the transactions of those loose times. Finding themselves unable to perform what they had covenanted, they voluntarily surrendered themselves prisoners to the English." * But with what degree of honour the Bishop behaved himself, will be best appreciated by judging from the whole of the conduct which he pursued.

Articles, &c. propounded by Edward I. against the Scottish Prelates, &c.

The articles then proceed to state:—But afterwards by his letters, and by his other deeds, it was well found that the Bishop had surrendered himself only to

Bishop Wisheart charged with having made such his surrender out of treachery,

* Lord Hailes adds the following note:—"It must however be remarked, that Edward ascribed this voluntary surrender to the treachery of Wisheart. He asserted that Wisheart repaired to the Castle of Rokesburgh, under pretence of yielding himself up, but with the concealed purpose of forming a conspiracy, in order to betray that Castle to the Scots. In proof of this Edward appealed to intercepted letters of Wisheart.—Antient muniments, London." Without doubt, the antient muniments thus quoted are the articles now printed, and of which Lord Hailes probably had abstracts or notes.

and that he might betray Roxburgh Castle to the enemy.

betray the garrison; and this his intention sufficiently appeared when the Host of Scotland besieged the Castle, until the King of England by force raised the siege. (p. 344, postea. § 6.)

Bishop Wisheart treated most courteously by Edward, enlarged upon his parole. He takes the oath of fealty for the fourth time.

When the King returned from Flanders, and heard how the Bishop had thus surrendered himself as an hostage, he, out of his special grace and courtesy, released the Bishop upon his parole, or with full liberty to go where he might choose. Being thus enlarged, the Bishop of his own free will came to Holm Coltram in England, unto the King, and he prayed the King's grace and mercy for all the harms which he had done: and the King received him into his favour. And then, for the fourth time, did the Bishop take the oath of fealty to the King as usual upon the Consecrated Host, and upon the Gospels, and upon the Cross of St. Neot, and upon the Black Rood of Scotland. And thereupon he executed his letters patent, sealed with his seal, before the Bishop of Carlisle, the Abbot of Holm Coltram, and many other great Lords of England, as appeared by public instrument thereupon made, and by the said letters sealed with his seal. (p. 345, postea. § 7.)

This oath was yet fresh, when the King dispatched the Prince of Wales towards Galloway, with a detachment of troops to act against Bruce and Wallace.—What did the Bishop?—He issued his letters patent by which he straightly commanded William Lydel, his Bailiff, to assemble all the forces of the See, to march them against the Prince and his army.

Bishop Wisheart breaks his fourth oath, changes sides, and sends forces to act against the English.

But when the King had discomfited the rebels, and caused peace to be proclaimed, then the Bishop came before the King at Cambuskenneth, and humbly prayed his grace and mercy for all his trespasses, and, for the fifth time, he performed fealty to the King as before, and foreswore himself as usual upon the Consecrated Host, and upon the Gospels, and upon the Cross of St. Neot, and upon the Black Rood of Scotland. The King thereupon, out of his special grace, received him kindly, and restored to him the temporalties of his See, which he had forfeited by his treason: and he forthwith acknowledged that he had received the same of the King's grace, and as from his liege Lord and rightful King of Scotland, to hold of him and none other, as appeared by the Bishop's letters patent, sealed with his seal, and by public instrument executed thereupon. (p. 345, postea. § 8.) And at the King's Parliament held in the city of St. Andrew's, at the feast of Easter then next following, the said Bishop of Glasgow, in the presence of the Earls, Barons, and other great Lords of England and of Scotland, for the sixth time took the oath of fealty to the King at the High Altar of the Cathedral, upon the Consecrated Host, the Gospels, the Cross of St. Neot, and the Black Rood of Scotland. (p. 345, postea. § 9.)

The Bishop takes the oath of fealty for the sixth time, and with great solemnity;

after which he changes sides again and assists Bruce totis viribus in his assumption of the Royal authority.

No further opportunity was allowed to Wisheart to take any more oaths: but, within eight days after the death of Comyn, he gave plenary absolution to Bruce, thereby testifying his approbation of the sacrilege and the murder. (p. 346, postea. § 10.) Bruce having asserted his intention of assuming the Royal authority, then did the Bishop prepare in his own wardrobe, the robes and attire in which the Bruce was to be arrayed when he caused himself to be named King of Scotland: and he sent the same, together with a banner of the arms of the Kingdom of Scotland, which had been long concealed in his Treasury, unto the

Earl of Carrick at the Abbey of Scone, on the day when he so caused himself to be proclaimed King of Scotland, all which matters are public and notorious, as appears by inquest thereupon solemnly taken, and by instrument under the hand of a Notary Public or Tabellion. (p. 347, postea. § 11.)

These matters notorious to all the world.

As soon as the Treasurer and other good folk of the King's Council in Scotland had heard of the murder,—so foul, so vile, and so sacrilegious: and that the Bishop had been aiding and assenting to the same, and that the Bishop had been the chief adviser and abettor of all the harms and evils which the Earl had done, violating his fidelity and the peace of the King;—they forthwith issued the King's writs, commanding the Bishop to repair to Berwick upon Tweed, which he in no wise obeyed; but he adhered to the Earl of Carrick, supporting him in all respects. (p. 347, postea. § 12.) In every mode and in every way had the Bishop exerted himself to foment the rebellion. He went about the country preaching to the people in order to excite them to espouse the cause of Bruce:—aye, and in his sermons he assured them that carrying on the war against the King of England was as meritorious as fighting against the Saracens in the Holy Land. (p. 348, postea. § 13.) And even the timber which the King had given to him for the purpose of building the steeple at Glasgow, he converted into engines of artillery for the purpose of attacking the Castles of our Lord the King: and having so assisted the enemies they were enabled to take the King's Castle of Cupar in Fife. Then the Bishop, as a man of war, held and defended the same, until a detachment of the King's troops, being the company of Sir Aymer de Valence, approached the Castle and captured the same by assault. And so was the Bishop taken prisoner, and placed in the custody in which he was then detained. (p. 349, postea. § 16.)

The Bishop holds out in the Castle of Cupar until he is taken prisoner.

The Pope is earnestly exhorted to punish the Bishop as a perjured traitor.

And the articles conclude with a petition to the Pope, that he will pay due regard to the extreme bad conduct of this false and perjured Prelate. He is charged with being the principal author and promoter of the wars and evils prevailing in Scotland, to the great hindrance of the affairs of the Holy Land: which, as the King knows, his Holiness has so much at heart, the King himself being more earnest about the same than about any other earthly thing. And the Pope is therefore requested to take order as to what may be done, so that the causes of trouble in Scotland being removed, the King may better attend to the affairs of the Holy Land, for the honour of Holy Church and of all Christendom. On a small membrane, hastily written, are memoranda or notes of certain of the matters laid to the charge of the two Bishops of St. Andrew's and Glasgow: apparently extracted from the preceding articles, by or for the use of the King's ambassadors. (p. 361, 362, postea. § 1–4.) It also contains accusations against the Bishop of Elgyn or Moray (§ 5.), who, more fortunate than his brethren, was then at large, and employed his liberty in exhorting his flock to the good work of joining Robert Bruce and fighting against the King. He also employed the same argument as the Bishop of Glasgow: that it was as meritorious to rebel against the King of England as to fight against the Saracens and Pagans in the Holy Land.

ment testifying the oath of fealty taken by the Bishop of Glasgow at Elgyn, 26 July 24 Ed. I., and his renunciation of the French alliance. (See Rymer, i. 843.) It appears to be addressed to the Pope, in the name or on the behalf of the Bishop of Chester and Sir Otho de Grandison, stating their earnest regret, should the King of England be prevented by domestic troubles from attending to the affairs of the Holy Land. And, as far as they can judge, no other impediment would arise excepting from the Scottish rebellion.

DOCUMENTS RELATING TO THE CUSTODY OF THE SCOTTISH PRISONERS.

Documents relating to the custody of the Scottish prisoners.

XXII. Amongst the documents relating to Scotland of the reign of Edward I., Rymer has printed one (i. 994.) to which he gives the following title:—"Instrumentum continens nomina plurimorum nobilium Scotiæ, fautorum Roberti de Brus, qui missi sunt ad diversa castra in Angliam," including amongst the mandates for the custody of other prisoners, the well known order directing the confinement of the Countess of Buchan in a cage at Berwick, and which instrument is quoted by Rymer as being in this Treasury. I do not, however, find amongst the muniments any one such instrument: but, instead thereof, there are three distinct documents, apparently Orders made by the King in Council, and in which the several directions for the modes of disposing of these captives were from time to time varied and altered, and in a manner highly deserving of attention. The document given by Rymer is in fact an instrument framed by a consolidation of these Orders, not distinguishing where one begins and another ends; and in this process he has concealed their most remarkable features, namely, the modifications which the Orders sustained in their different stages.

p. 351-358, postea. No. CLII. to CLV.

Erroneously printed by Rymer as one instrument.

Variously modified.

"Alain, who was Earl of Menteith," was first committed to the custody of Sir John de Hastings, who was to put him in safe keeping in England. This direction was subsequently varied by erasures and alterations, giving Sir John the power to confine the "late Earl" at Bergaveny or elsewhere. (p. 353, 354, postea. § 1.)

placed in custody in the Keep of Rochester Castle; but he does not appear to have surrendered. (p. 354, postea. § 2.)

The like for the Earl of Athol.

The name of John Earl of Athol was first entered upon the order, as a memorandum, and without any directions. The course to be adopted with respect to him was probably not settled. Some time afterwards, as appears by the variations both in the colour of the ink and the character of the handwriting, it was ordered that he should be conducted to London by Sir Hugh le Despenser. (p. 355, postea. § 3.) With respect to David, the son and heir of him who was Earl of Athol, the order, as first made, did not sustain any further variations: he was to be kept in safe custody in England by the Earl of Gloucester. (p. 357, postea. § 4.)

The like for Donald, son of the Earl of Mar, an infant,—how mitigated.

The orders respecting "Donald the son "of the Earl of Mar" sustained several modifications before the plan of his captivity was finally settled. According to the first order, he was to be delivered to the Bishop of Chester: and by him conveyed to the Castle of Bristol, and the Bishop was to provide a valet, wary and trusty,—"avisez et seur," who was to wait upon Donald, as his master and companion,—

Documents relating to the custody of the Scottish prisoners.

"que entende au dit Dovenald come a son "maistre et compagnon." (p. 356, postea. § 12.) By a second order, the Bishop of Chester is exonerated from his trust, and Donald, who in this second order is styled "the child who is heir of Mar," is placed under the immediate custody and charge of the Constable of the Castle of Bristol, with liberty to go freely about the Castle. A further extension of liberty, is then granted by a third order, permitting the young prisoner to walk in the garden and elsewhere within the close of the Castle, and that he shall not be put in irons; an alteration which evidently implies that under the first or original order, he would, as a matter of course, have been thus restrained. But upon further consideration, it appeared advisable to prevent this extraordinary indulgence of personal freedom from being abused or becoming a precedent: and to the words—"mais qu'il soit "hors de fers,"—a clause was added at a subsequent period, as appears by the variation in the colour of the ink,—"tant "come il soit de si tendre age,"—so long as he shall be of such tender age, virtually directing that the permission by which he was relieved from gyves and fetters, was not to be continued, if he should be detained in custody after he came to man's estate. (p. 353, postea. § 2.)

The like for Margaret, daughter of the Bruce; order to place her in close confinement in a cage,—afterwards rescinded.

With respect to Margaret, the daughter of Robert Bruce, the first order directed her to be treated with great severity. She was to be sent to the Tower of London, and there kept in close confinement in a cage.—Margerie la fille Robert de Brus soit envoiée à la Tour de Londres pour estre mise ilueques en cage, et que elle ne parle à nul homme, ne nul homme à luy, fors ceux que le Conêtable de la Tour assignera pour luy garder. (p. 358, postea. § 8.) But this extreme rigour probably excited some compunction: and, the order being cancelled, another order was made, that she should be kept in England under the safe custody of Sir Henry Percy, together with Christina, also the sister of Bruce, and then the wife of Sir Christopher Seton. (p. 359, postea, § 9.)

Directions for caging the Countess of Buchan.

The order respecting the Countess of Buchan did not sustain any variation. Letters of Privy Seal were addressed to the Chamberlain of Scotland, or to his Lieutenant at Berwick upon Tweed, that he should make a cage in one of the turrets of the Castle, of strong lattice work of wood, barred, and well strengthened with iron, in which the Countess of Buchan is to be placed: and she is to be so safely kept in such cage, that she can in no wise come out of the same. The Chamberlain is to assign or appoint one or two women of the said town of Berwick, English, and free from suspicion; these are to wait upon the Countess with meat and drink, and with such other things as she in such her dwelling requires; and he is to cause her to be kept so close and straightly in her cage, that she may not speak to any man or woman of the Scottish nation, nor, indeed, to any one else, excepting the women so appointed, and the other persons who were to have her under their care. The cage is to be so constructed that the Countess is to have therein all conveniences of a handsome chamber: but the same is to be so safely and surely ordained that no peril may happen concerning the care of the Countess, and that he who so has the care of her, may answer body for body, and have due allowance of all the costs which he shall incur.

PETITIONS MADE TO THE KING FOR GRANTS OF LAND, &c. IN SCOTLAND. —GRANTS OF FORFEITURES, &c.

Petitions to the King for land, &c. in Scotland. — Grants of forfeitures, &c.

XXIII. When Edward was preparing to invade Scotland, and when he afterwards did advance into Scotland, in his last campaign, the Earls and Barons and others who composed his host solicited the lands and possessions of the enemies against whom they were opposed, and grants were made or promised to them accordingly. The petitions were entered upon a roll; and they lasted all the way, from Westminster to Lanercost. The King was thus enabled to pay them by expectations, and each individual would exert himself the more to conquer the foe whose lands were to be his own. This proceeding was quite in the spirit of the feudal age, nor can it be said to be inconsistent with the rules of fair and open warfare.

Whilst the English were thus guerdoned, the Scots also obtained substantial rewards. A memorandum, unfortunately much mutilated, and without date, testifies—amongst other entries—how Dougal Macdougall was gratified by the lands and possessions of Robert Boyd and Brice de Blair. (p. 318, 319, postea. § 3, 4.) Macdougall was also entrusted with the sum of £100, to be

PANNEL CONTAINING THE NAMES OF PERSONS EXCUSED FROM ATTENDANCE AT THE PARLIAMENT AT CARLISLE.

Pannel containing the names of persons excused from attendance at the Parliament at Carlisle. Jan. 1307.

XXIV. A great Parliament was held at Carlisle on the octaves of St. Hilary, 35 Edward I., for the purpose of settling the Kingdom of Scotland. A pannel is extant amongst the Scottish documents, purporting that the persons thereinafter mentioned, were excused, for certain reasons, from personal appearance in this Parliament; and the King wills and grants that their procurators, with sufficient letters patent, shall be received in their name, to treat and agree upon the matters concerning the said Parliament, in the same manner as they might do in their own proper persons.

Palgrave's Parl. Writs, vol. i. p. 283. p. 360, postea. No. CLVII.

The persons so excused are the Bishop of Salisbury, the Bishop of Winchester, the Bishop of Rochester, the Abbot of St. Edmund's, the Abbot of Peterborough, the Abbot of Hyde, the Prior of St. Swythin's Winchester, the Earl of Oxford, Sir Geoffry de Camville, and Sir Philip de Kyme. And, upon the Roll of the Parliament, we find accordingly, that the Earl, Sir Geoffry, and Sir Philip are noted as having been excused by the King. This document is important, by showing how strictly the Parliamentary attendance was enforced: and that exemption from Parliamentary duty, was entirely a matter of grace and favour.

ORDINANCE FOR THE PRESERVATION OF THE PEACE OF SCOTLAND.

p. 361, postea. No. CLVIII.

XXV. In the month of February 1307, the King being at Lanercost, he issued an ordinance, according to which, for the preservation of the tranquillity of the country, proclamation was to be made that all who had not yet come into the King's peace, and all others who had committed or should commit felonies, were to be pursued with hue and cry. (p. 361, postea. No. CLVIII. § 1.) All those persons who had taken a part in the murder of Comyn, who had assented thereto, or who had harboured the murderers, are to be hanged and drawn.

All taken in arms against the King are to be in like manner punished with death; all persons who had surrendered either before or after the battle are to be kept in custody at the King's pleasure. But, as for the poor commons who had been coerced to take part against the King, they were to be ransomed as the King should think fit.—And, in testimony of these matters, the King had caused the ordinance to be chirographed in three parts; the first to be kept in the Treasury, the second in the Wardrobe, and the third by the Seneschal of the Household.*

Documents relating to Scotland, antiently in the Treasury, but now lost.

Few of these documents would have been more interesting than the Roll containing the laws and customs of the Burghs of Scotland. (Antient Kalendars, &c. vol. i. p. 132. § 34.) An important entry is made respecting the documents found upon Wallace when he was taken prisoner: they consisted of letters of safe conduct addressed to him from Haco King of Norway, Philip King of France, and John Balliol King of Scotland—the latter, however, being probably in the nature of credentials,—together with the confederations and ordinances made between Wallace and certain Magnates of Scotland; all of which were duly delivered to the King, at Kingston, by John de Segrave. (Antient Kalendars, &c. vol. i. p. 134. § 46.) These foreign letters seem to give some support to the traditions respecting the residence of Wallace in France.

Besides the documents specially calendared or registered by Bishop Stapleton, various instruments are enumerated in general terms:—documents relating to the Kings of Scotland and others of the Kingdom, such as Charters granted by the Kings of that Land, and deeds and writings of divers Magnates thereof, and various other memoranda: of which, says the compiler of the Kalendar, no precise description can be given on account of the confusion of the writings and their small value. (Antient Kalendars, &c. vol. i. p. 137. § 71.) These documents filled certain forcers of leather bound with iron, four hanapers covered with black leather, nine wooden forcers, eighteen hanapers of twigs, and twenty-two boxes;—an enumeration which can only excite our curiosity and our regret.

Certain secret documents delivered into the Treasury.

XXVII. On the 19th Nov. 30 Hen. VI. John Blake, one of the Clerks of the Signet, delivered, by the King's command, into the Receipt of the Treasury, to the Treasurer and Chamberlains there, two round boxes of wood, severally sealed under the seal of the Lord Cromwell, and containing secret writings unknown to the said Treasurer and Chamberlain, to be kept in the Great Treasury: which boxes remain in the Treasury in the great chest where the Crown is placed. On the 24th May following, the boxes were, by order of the Council, delivered to the Lord Treasurer, the Earl of Worcester, to be taken to the King at Sheen: and by a memorandum in the margin, it appears that these documents related to the "release of the Kingdom of "Scotland."

In the month of November, 36 Hen. VI. 1457, John Hardyng of Kyme, the author of the well-known Metrical Chronicle of English history, deposited in this Treasury, by the special command of Henry VI., six documents, professing to be Letters Patent or other instruments executed by certain Kings of Scotland, and evidencing the subjection of that Realm to the Crown of England. They are particularly specified in an indenture made between John Talbot Earl of Shrewsbury, the Lord Treasurer of England, and the Chamberlains of the Exchequer, of the one part, and Hardyng of the other part. (Appendix, No. X. p. 377, postea.) Being so received, they were put into two square wooden boxes, which were placed in the great chest in which parchment is kept, over the Receipt, and marked "Scocia, Hardyng."

Hardyng claimed great credit and desert for the acquisition of these and other instruments, and he repeatedly notices them, and the transactions relating to them, in his historical poems. He made, or professes to have made, his journey into Scotland, where he obtained them at the hazard of his life, sometime in the reign of Henry V., and at the bidding and commandment of the King, paying four hundred and fifty marks for the same.*

Not merely had he incurred this heavy expense, but also, in the acquisition of them, exposing his life to great dangers, he had sustained an incurable mayhem. So anxious was James I. to obtain these and other notable evidences, that he would have given a thousand marks of gold for them.

Forged instrument under the Privy Seal of James I., dated 10th March 1434, by which he sought to confirm his story.

And a forged instrument in the form of Letters Patent under the Privy Seal of James I., and now in the Treasury, was unquestionably produced by Hardyng in support of the assertions thus made. (Appendix, No. IX. p. 376, postea.) Addressed to "John Hardyng, Squier of the Lord "Unframville," they grant him sure and safe conduct to come and go to the King's presence wheresoever he may be in the Realm of Scotland, with six servants and horses, there safely to abide for forty days, bringing with him "the things whereof we "spoke to you at Coldyngham, for which "we bind ourselves by these our letters to "pay you one thousand marks of English "nobles, without delay, default, or male-"engyn; and safely with that gold and all "his other goods, servants, horses, and "chattels, home again to Harbottle Castle "to return without disturbance, hurt, or "grievance by any Scotsman."—And the Letters Patent conclude with the declaration that they are given for surety of payment of such money.

Hardyng was decently rewarded by Henry VI.; and a grant was made to him of a pension of twenty pounds per annum during his life, to be paid to him half-yearly by the Sheriff of the county of Lincoln, the same being granted and secured to him by Letters Patent under the Great Seal. It is observable that in this grant the bribe is said to have been offered for the purpose of inducing him to yield up the documents which he had "procured." But the allusion to the transaction in his Chronicles is so expressed as to leave some doubt whether the bribe, as he represents it, was not also promised to induce him to embezzle some instruments already in the Treasury.*

It is declared that the Church of Scotland shall have all her rights entire, as they were in times of old, and as she was accustomed to have in the time of Malcolm late King of Scotland; reserving nevertheless unto the Archbishops of York all their metropolitan rights and liberties throughout the whole Kingdom of Scotland, and also to the Bishop of Durham and the Prior of the same Church, in like manner, his liberties for ever.

Alexander is further made to declare, that he grants for himself and his heirs, to all the Prelates, Earls, Barons, Knights, and all other freemen of his Kingdom, that he or his heirs will not impose any customs, subsidies, tenths, fifteenths, talliages, impositions, or other levies upon them, their heirs, or their lands or tenements, unless by the free grant and concession of the three Estates of the Kingdom of Scotland in full Parliament assembled. And this alleged charter of Alexander is by King David in all respects ratified, confirmed, and allowed, by the advice and assent of the three Estates of the Realm in Parliament assembled. Forged charter of David Bruce, acknowledging that he holds the Kingdom of Scotland of Edward III. as of old, and notwithstanding any releases made by the Kings of England. 1 Nov. 5 David II.

3. In another forgery, David Bruce, by his Letters Patent, declares that his predecessors Kings of Scotland from the old time had held and ought to hold the Kingdom of Scotland by liege homage and fealty, and that many of them had personally performed such liege homage and fealty: and that, freely and spontaneously, as appeared by the antient records and pleas of the Crown, as well in Parliaments as in the Eyres of the Chamberlains and Justiciars of the King's predecessors.

King David therefore binds and obliges himself, his heirs and successors, Kings of Scotland, to hold the same Kingdom of his dear brother Edward King of England and his successors Kings of England, Overlords of the Kingdom of Scotland, by liege homage and fealty, and to keep fealty towards them against all men, whether in life or death: all and all manner of remises, releases, quit-claims, and other letters whatsoever, by the Kings of England or any of them to the Kings of Scotland made or granted, to the contrary thereof in any wise notwithstanding. In witness whereof he had caused such his letters to be made patent, by the advice and assent of the three Estates of the Kingdom in his then present Parliament held at Edinburgh, in the presence of Henry de Bellomonte, Earl of Buchan and Constable of Scotland, Gilbert de Umframville Earl of Angus, Lord of Prudhow and Mareschal of Scotland, and Henry Percy Lord of Alnwick, for such purpose especially deputed "by "our dear Lord and brother the Over-lord "of Scotland." Dated the first day of November, in full Parliament, in the fifth year of his reign. The Patent is indorsed in a cramped hand, evidently coeval with the text of the document, such indorsement stating how David King of Scotland acknowledged that he held the Kingdom of Scotland of Edward III. and his heirs by liege homage and fealty, as Overlords of Scotland, after the release which he, Edward III., had made to the King of Scotland of the services of Scotland. (Appendix, No. III. p. 369, 370, postea.) This document is noticed in Hardyng's indenture, as having been delivered by him.

his predecessors and progenitors from the old time, held, as they were bound to do by law, the Kingdom of Scotland of the Kings of England for the time being; and for such Kingdom, and the adjoining Islands, had spontaneously and without compulsion, performed liege homage and fealty to the Kings of England, as sufficiently appeared by the antient records of the Crown. Therefore David binds himself and his successors, Kings of Scotland, to hold the said Kingdom and Islands of our excellent Lord and brother Edward King of England, and his heirs and successors Kings of England, Over-lords of the Kingdom of Scotland, by liege homage and fealty: and by and with them to stand, live, and die against all men, as well in peace as war; all remises, releases, quit-claims, and other letters whatsoever to the contrary by any King of England granted, signed, or sealed, to or in favour of any King of Scotland in times past,—and all treaties, conventions, and confederations whatsoever, heretofore made between any King of Scotland and any King of France, to the contrary thereof in any wise notwithstanding; the same being thereby for ever relinquished and abandoned.—

"In witness whereof we have caused "these our letters to be made patent, "to endure for ever, by the assent of "the three Estates of our Kingdom in "our Parliament held at Edinburgh, in "the Holy Rood House. Given at Holy "Rood House, the first day of November, "in our full Parliament, in the fifth year "of our reign." (Appendix, No. IV. p. 371, postea.) This document is also noticed in Hardyng's indenture. The seal is of brown wax: on the one side is represented the King sitting upon his throne, nearly resembling the authentic seal of Robert I., with the inscription "Sigillum: "David: Dei gratia Rex Scottor':" On the reverse, is a shield charged with the arms of Scotland: and the same inscription repeated. This seal differs materially from that subsequently employed by David II. (Anderson's Diplomata, plate LIII.) Those who are versed in Scottish antiquities must decide whether the seal has been detached from an authentic document; or whether, what is perhaps more probable, it be a cast taken from an authentic seal. The reverse, with the shield of Scotland, was evidently employed in manufacturing the seal appended to Malcolm's charter.

A third forged Charter of David Bruce, to the same effect as the preceding.

5. Letters Patent or Charter, in the name of David Bruce, testifying, that on the day of the date thereof, at the Monastery of Coldyngham, he had in person performed homage liege to his most serene Lord and brother Edward, King of England and Over-lord of Scotland, in the words therein set forth:—"Most excellent Lord Edward, King of England and of France;" David King of Scotland becomes thereby his liege man, of life and limb and worldly honour; liege fealty will he bear to Edward and his heirs Kings of England, as Over-lords of Scotland, and with him will he, King David, live and die against all men; and he acknowledges, agrees, and obliges himself, his heirs and successors, Kings of Scotland, to hold the entire Kingdom of Scotland of King Edward and his heirs for ever, by the before-mentioned services; all and singular remises, releases, quit-claims, and other letters by the Kings of England to the contrary granted to any Kings of Scotland in any wise notwithstanding. This done before Henry Percy,

Lord of Alnwick and Ralph Neville Lord of Raby, special Commissioners of the said Over-lord for the purpose of hearing, admitting, receiving, and presenting the premises to him, and so deputed for his person and in his name by his letters patent remaining with King David; of which letters patent the date is the 20th day of March in the twenty-sixth year of the reign of the said Lord Edward III. This last date, appears to have been added after the instrument was written. (Appendix, No. V. p. 372, postea.) The seal of brown wax, with the same impression as the preceding (p. ccix, antea, § 4), is very awkwardly appended by a brown band of silken ferret.

6. An indenture in the Lowland or Northumbrian dialect, or rather, in an affectation of that dialect, purporting to be made at the Gray Friars of London, on the 12th April 1352, between "the "right noble and mighty Prince Edward "King of England, Sovereign Lord of "Scotland," on the one part, and the mighty Prince David King of Scots on the other part. It contains stipulations for a general truce by land and by sea, from the first day of May then next, for the term of fourteen years. If any subject of either Crown shall break the truce, and be found guilty of such infraction by six English and six Scots, his Warden "shall "gar hange him there without delay, in "sight of both the Marchers." The indenture is indorsed in the cramped hand to which I have before alluded: and it is described in such indorsement, as showing how David II. made a truce with Edward III., and acknowledged him to be the supreme Lord of Scotland after the release made to the King of Scots. A label is cut out for the seal, but the seal is lost. (Appendix, No. VI. p. 373, postea.) It is one of the instruments noticed in Hardyng's indenture.

8. Letters Patent in the name of Robert II., addressed to the Chamberlain of Scotland. It declares that in his last Par-

And thereupon King Robert commands his Chamberlain that he is not to distrain or trouble the said Bishops, Earls, or Barons in anywise by reason of the premises; and if he has taken any distress from them or any of them, he is forthwith to restore the same. 10. Letters Patent, in the name of Robert II., purporting to be an exemplification of the Letters Patent of the 5th David II., acknowledging the superiority of the English Crown (p. ccvii, &c. supra, § 4.); such exemplification being also made in Parliament in Holy Rood House, in the first year of King Robert's reign. The document is so much injured that it was useless to print the few lines from which its import can be collected. The seal, however, yet remains. It is of brown wax, and is either a genuine seal of his successor, Robert III., (Anderson, plate LX.) removed from some other instrument, or a cast from such a genuine seal.

of treason in becoming the liege man of Edward III., inasmuch as all the Kings of England, from the old time, had been Over-lords of the Kingdom of Scotland: and, upon this allegation, supported by the records of the Parliament of Scotland and the Justices in Eyre, he was discharged accordingly from the accusation.*

Earl of Athol had been guilty of high treason in becoming the liege man of Edward III.

12. Letters Patent, whereby John Grame or Grahame Earl of Menteith, indicted as guilty of high treason for the same act, pleaded in full Parliament that he was not guilty of high treason in becoming the liege man of Edward III., inasmuch as the Kings of England had always been Over-lords of the Kingdom: and by this allegation, proved in Parliament, and by records of proceedings before the Chamberlains and Justiciars of Scotland in their Eyres, he was discharged of the accusation by record of Parliament, dated 3d April, 6 Richard II.*

culty the forgery of Malcolm's charter. (Appendix, No. I. p. 367, postea.) Brady has printed the charter of 5 David II., granted in his full Parliament at Holy Rood House; but it is almost difficult to believe that he could really have been deceived. The falsity of the whole set of documents is most apparent. The language, the expressions, the dates, the general tenor,—all bespeak the forgery. The writing is in a character not properly belonging to any age or time, and the modern armorial bearings affixed to Malcolm's charter show equally the ignorance and the boldness of the author of the forgery.

Lastly, he commemorates in like manner the delivery of the release which Edward III. made of the superiority of Scotland, when under the influence of his mother and of Mortimer, and which he delivered to Edward IV. at Leicester, together with the patent by which the Earl of Dunbar bound himself and his heirs to hold his lands, as of the King of England.*

ture of fraud and sincerity. It is possible that the submissions of the competitors may have been amongst the documents delivered up by Isabella and Mortimer to Robert Bruce, in 1328: or, if we adopt the language of Henry VIII., "stolen out of "the Treasury by the Scots;" and the restitution of these may have been effected by Hardyng's exertions. This conjecture would not be inconsistent with the supposition, that, in order to render his services of greater importance, he had added to these authentic documents the spurious instruments which he seems to have doled out at different times. The succession of his deliveries of these documents throws Hardyng's Chronicle by Ellis, Preface.

It is urged that Hardyng may have been misled: and, that having made a bonâ fide purchase of the documents, he was imposed upon by the knaves with whom he had his dealings. Hardyng, however, was in all respects more likely to be a deceiver than deceived. He was a diligent antiquary,—a collector of antient documents;—and the style of the forgeries is just such as would result from an individual possessing archæological knowledge, and yet using it according to the uncritical character of his age. He is said to have become the sworn enemy of the Scots.*

* "Johannes Hardingus in septentrionalibus Angliæ "regionibus illustri prosapia natus, vir in pacis et belli "disciplinis clarus. Cum passim in historiis invenisset "Scotorum Reges Angliæ Regibus esse subjectos, videret "tamen plerumque rebelles et nonnunquam Gallorum "potencia fretos, Anglis non modo non parere, sed etiam "(licet cum suo damno) bellum indicere: se juratum Scot-"torum hostem declaravit, et ad vindicandas injurias pa-"triæ irrogatas se tum calamo tum gladio in eos armavit." (Pitsæus, 653.)

Forged documents relating to the subjugation of Scotland.

His writings certainly display the most adverse feelings against the Nation. That his historical investigations which convinced him that the Scots had unduly withdrawn their subjection may have contributed to excite his feelings, is by no means inconsistent with his conduct: and he may perhaps have deluded himself into the belief that the pious fraud was innocent, since his own country would be served thereby.

2 In p^imis, ex parte Nobilis Viri Dñi Florencii Comitis Holandie fuit pro jure suo ꝓpositum narratum et petitum in hunc modũ. Florencius Comes Holandie petit a Dño Rege Anglie superiori et directo Domino Regni Scocie hereditatem suam dicti Regni sibi liberari, tanq^{a}m heredi ꝑpinquiori: eo q̃ Margareta filia Regis Norwegie consanguinea iꝑius Comitis cujus heres iꝑe est fuit seisita in dominico suo ut de feodo de predc̃o Regno Scocie tempore pacis tempore Dñi Edwardi Regis Anglie supioris et directi Domini Regni Scocie et inde nuper obiit seisita, Et de predc̃a Margareta quia obiit sine herede de se resorciabit^{r} feodum et dominicum et debuit resortire cuidam Ade ut consang^{i}nee et heredi sororis Witti q^{o}ndam Regis Scocie tritavi predc̃e Margarete. Et de iꝑa Ada descendit feodum et dominicū et debuit descendere cuidam Florencio ut filio et heredi. Et de iꝑo Florencio descendit feodum et dominicum et descendere debuit cuidam Witto ut filio et heredi. Et de iꝑo Witto descendit feodum et dominicum et descendere debuit isti Florencio ut filio et heredi qui nunc petit: Et q̃ iꝑe est heres iꝑius Margarete ꝑpinquior, ꝑatus est ostendere prout debet, salvo sibi beneficio addendi mutandi et minuendi prout melius * viderit expedire.

3 Ex parte Nobilis Viri Dñi Patricii de Dunbar Comitis de Marchia, fuit pro jure suo ꝑpositum narratum et petitum in hunc modū. Patricius Comes de Marchia supplicat q̃ super Regno Scocie fiat sibi justicia quod debet de jure sibi obvenire, ꝑpter defectum successionis descendentis a Rege Scocie Alexandro ultimo per reversionem et resortum ad Idam filiam Witti q^{o}ndam Regis Scocie, De qua descendit jus succedendi in dictū regnū ad Pat^{i}cium Comitem de Marchia tanq^{a} ad filium et heredem, A quo descendit idem jus ad Patriciū scd̃m similiꝯ Comitē de Marchia tanq^{a} ad filium et heredem. Et ab eo descendit jus ad Pat^{i}cium tertiū similiꝯ Comitē de Marchia tanq^{a}m ad filium et heredem, qui nunc petit ut heres ꝑpinquior per successionē: Regnū Scocie.

4 Ex parte vero Nobilis Viri Dñi Witti de Vescy fuit pro jure suo ꝑpositum narratum atq̃ petitū sub hac forma verboꝝ. Willi's Rex Scocie genuit Alexandrum Regem qui regnavit post iꝑm, et idem Alexander genuit Alexandrū scd̃m qui postea regnavit et duxit in uxorem Margaretā filiam Henrici Regis Anglie illust^is^, de quibꝫ exivit una Margareta que fuit nupta Regi Norwegie. Et de illis exivit quedam alia Margareta que fuit heres Scocie, que quidem Margareta obiit sine herede de corpore suo sicut illa que fuit minoris etatis. Ĩm idem Witts Rex Scocie genuit Margaretam sororē predicti Alexandri Regis. Et fuit nupta illa Margareta Eustachio de Vescy, de qua genuit Wittm de Vescy qui obiit in Vasconia. Et idem Witts genuit Johem de Vescy qui obiit sine herede de corpore suo et Wittm de Vescy frem ip̃ius Johis qui modo petit Regnum Scocie sicut ꝑpinquior heres de sanguine ꝑdc̃e Margarete que obiit sine herede de se: per cujus obitū jus debet resortiri isti Witto qui modo petit.

5 Ex parte vero Nobilis Viri Domini Witti de Ros pro jure suo, fuit similiꝗ ꝑpo̅itum narratū et petitum in forma subsc^i^pta. Willi'ꝰ de Ros supplicat q̨ justicia sibi fiat de clamio suo quod ponit in Regnū Scocie, quod debet sibi obvenire de jure in hunc modum. Rex Witts genuit Alexandrum Regem qui regnavit post ip̃m. Et idem Alexander genuit Alexandrū scd̃m qui postea regnavit et habuit unā filiam Margaretam nomine que fuit nupta Regi Norwegie de quibꝫ exivit quedam alia Margareta que p^ꝰ^ea fuit heres Scocie et obiit sine herede de corpore suo, et per defectum exitus de sanguine ejusdē Margarete et per revꝰsionē * debet reverti ad Isabellam p^i^mogenitam et ad Adam et Margaretam filias dicti Regis Witti patris dicti Alexandri frat^is^ ꝑdc̃aꝫ Isabelle Ade et Margarete et patris Alexandri qui ultimo obiit, sicut ad ꝑpinquiores de sang^i^ne ꝑdc̃e Margarete que quidem Isabella desponsata fuit Robo de Ros. Et de ip̃is Robo et Isabella exivit quidam Witts, et de Witto quidam Robs, de quo Witts exivit qui nūc petit sicut ꝑpinquior heres ꝑ defectum sang^i^nis ꝑdc̃e Margarete per reversionē ꝑdc̃am ad Isabellam antecessorem suū tanq^a^ ad p^i^mogenitam, cui Isabelle racione p^i^mogeniture debet dictum Regnū integre remanere. Et q̨ Regnum non debet dividi, ꝑatus est verificare.

6 Item ex parte Domini Robi de Pinkeny similiꝗ pro jure suo, fuit ibidem ꝑpositum narratum et petitū hoc modo.

David Rex Scocie genuit Henricū Henricus Wittm Witts Alexandrum Pimū Alexander Pim⁹ Alex'm Scdm et ille Alex'm T'cium qui obiit sine prole, et Margareta Regina Norwegie ex qua genita est quedam alia Margareta que jam obiit sine prole. Ex pdco Henr̃ patre Regis Witti similiꝗ genita fuit quedam Margareta, ex qua Margareta Alicia, et ex ea Henricus de Pinkeny, a quo Henr̃ Robs de Pinkeny qui nūc petit Regnū Scocie per revsionē et resortum ad dcam Margaretam ||preaviam suam, ppter defectum prolis exeuntis de pdca Margareta filia Regis Norwegie.

7 Item ex parte Domini Nicolai de Soules similiꝗ pro jure suo, fuit ibidem ppõitum narratū et petitū in hunc modū. Sicut Domino placuit, Alexandro qui ultimo obiit Rex seisitus de Regno Scocie et omibz illis qui de illo per rectam lineam exierunt viam univse carnis ||ingresso: jus ejusdem Regni resorciebatʳ et debuit resortiri Margarete q°ndam uxori Alani le Husser sicut sorori et heredi ejusdē Regis Alexandri. Et de ipa Margareta descendit jus et descendere debuit Ermegarde filie et heredi predci Regis Alexandri. Et de ipa Ermegarda descendit jus et descendere debuit Nicolao de Soules qui nūc petit sicut filius et heres.

8 It'm ex parte Patricii Galightly eodem modo ibidem pro jure suo, fuit ppõitū narratū et petitum sub hac forma. Coram vob auditoribz a Domino Rege Anglie supiori et directo Domino Regni Scocie deputatis ac cōmunitate tota, dicit et pponit Patʳcius Galightly, q cum bone memorie Rex Witts genuerat Alexandrū Regē patrē Regis Alexandri ultimo defuncti et idem Patʳcius Galightly sit ex Rege Henrico in legittimo matʳmonio procreat⁹ et per hoc ex regali progenie sit ppinquior Dño Alexandro Regi ut filius patrui sui Alexandro videlicet ultimo nunc defuncto de cujus successione nūc agitur qd ipm Patʳcium Dño Alexandro Regi defuncto ppinquiorē ||gradum et jure pociorem ad successionem Regni sibi de jure debiti preferatis, potissime cum ab omnibz sit juratum q post mortem ejusdem q̃ deficiente domicella ppinquiorem de sangʳne regali in Regem assument, et ab eo nul-

Superiority of Scotland. — Notarial Protocol of the proceedings at Berwick, of the 15th October 1292.

1 In nomine Domini Am'. Anno a Nativitate ejusdem millesimo ducentesimo nonagesimo scdo. Indictõe sexta, mensis Octobr̃ die quintadecima, in crastino videlicet Translacõis Sc̃i Edwardi Regis et Confessoris existente Domino Rege Anglie illustri apud Berewycum super Twedam in Castro ejusdem, Parliamentumq; suum ibidem indictum tenente, Comparũnt coram ip̃o Nobiles Viri omnes et singuli jus ad Regnum Scocie vendicãtes tanq^a coram Supiori et directo suo Domino dicti Regni una cum Auditoribꝫ electis nominatis et assignatis p Regem memoratũ, ad audiendum peticiones et jura petenciũ Regnũ prelibatũ et discuciendũ de jure eoꝯdem et discussione plene facta Domino Regi quid invenĩnt referendum. Presentibꝫ ibidem ut^i usq; Regni Nobilibꝫ et P̃latis una cum sapiencioribꝫ et discrecioribꝫ ut^i usq; Regni certis ex causis ibidem vocatis petitum fuit per D'n'm Regem memoratum publice, et quesitum sicut alias, per quas leges sive consuetudines esset in predc̃o negocio ad judicium procedendum, et an in casu in quo leges certe vel consuetudines reperirentur aut etiam diverse utpote in Anglie et Scocie Regnis, qualiẽ esset ad judicium procedendum et etiam judicandum. Et si de dicto Regno Scocie sit aliter judicandũ q^a de Comitatibꝫ Baroniis et aliis tenuris: responderuntq; eidem unanimit^r nullo contradicente vel reclamante tam Nobiles q^a Prelati Auditores et alii q per leges et consuetudines Regni illius ‖qui preest si certe reperiant^r in hoc casu judicare potest ꝛ debet. Et si in casu hujusmodi certe leges vl̃ consuetudines non inveniant^r: idem Domin^ꝯ Rex racõe preeminencie dignitatis sue regalis de consilio Nobilium Prelatoꝯ Procerum et Magnatum Regni sui debet et potest condere novam legem. Dixũnt insuper q de predc̃o Regno Scocie quoad jus succedendi est judicandum et ad judicium procedendũ sicut de Comitatibꝫ Baroniis et aliis tenuris inpartibilibꝫ.

2 Quibꝫ responsionibꝫ intellectis, quesivit Domin⁹ Rex a predictis Dominis Robo de Brus et Johanne de Balliolo an aliqª alia qª ea que alias ꝑposuerant ꝑponere dicere vel ostendere volũnt, pro inſti sui declaracõe, et si sic, q ea ꝑponent. Et responsione facta per eosdem q sic: idem Domin⁹ Rex omnibꝫ Auditoribꝫ memoratis ꝓcepit pariſ et injunxit q locum quo alias fuant super facto hujusmodi adirent et predcos Robm et Johem benigne audirent, sibiq; eoꝝ racões ostensiões et jura ꝓhabita discussione diligenti fideliter referrent.

3 Coram quibꝫ Auditoribꝫ dicti Robs et Johannes ad iꝑpius Domini Regis mandatum in Eccłia Fratrum Ꝑdicatoꝝ de Berewico deserta constituti: idem Robs de Brus ad ea que in petitione sua alias pro jure ꝑposita continent adjecit narrando et raciocinando, q questio super jure regnandi habet ꝓminari et judicari per jus naturale per quod Reges regnant et non per leges et consuetudines inter subditos usitatas, per quod quidem jus naturale proximior in sangⁱne linea collaterali melius jus habet regnandi.

4 Dicebat etiam q lex et constitucio que sunt inſ tenẽtes et subjectos supiorẽ ligare nõ possunt, precipue Regem suum, unde dixit q licet in hereditatibꝫ partibilibꝫ scdm leges et consuetudines inſ subditos observatas pⁱmogenita aliqªm habeat ꝓrogativam, in Regno tamen impartibili ubi proximior in sangⁱne regali legitimus tempore vacacionis regni invent⁹ scdm jus naturale est ꝓferend⁹, pⁱmogenita nullā habet nec habere debet ꝓrogativam.

5 Dixit etiam qd consuetudo succedendi in Regnū Scocie plene facit pro eo, quia usitatum est in Scocia q frater Regis predecedentis ꝓferendus est ejus filio in successione Regni Scocie racione ꝑximitatis in gradu. Et ad hoc quedam antiqua produxit exempla.

6 Videlicet q quidam Dovenaldus fraſ Kineth Mac Alpin regnavit inmediate post frem suū, excluso Constantino pⁱmogenito ꝓdicti Kineth et hoc racione ꝑpinquitatis sangⁱnis ip̃ius Alpini. Et post ꝑdictum Dovenaldū regnavit *Constantin*ꝰ p'mogenitꝰ ip̃ius Kineth Mac Alpin. Et post eum regnavit Eth fratꝛ ejus junior excluso Dovenaldo filio ꝑdicti Constantini. De quibꝫ Constantino ⁊ Eth fratribꝫ et filiis predc̃i Kineth Mac Alpin descenderunt omnes Reges qui postea regnavnt in Scocia usq; modo. Et semp̄ sicut erant ꝓpinquiores in gradu regnabant, quilibꝫ post alium usq; ad tempus Regis Malcolmi viri Sc̃e Margarete Regine. Et adhuc post ꝑdictum Malcolmū quidam frater ejus regnavit excluso filio ejusdem Malcolmi. Et adduxit ultra similiꝛ idem Dñs Robs quedam alia exempla de consimilibꝫ successionibꝫ in quibꝫdam terris aliis et regionibꝫ, utpote de Comitatu Sabaudie et Regno Hyspanie.

7 Dixit etiam q̄ mulier regnare non debet quia officium regiminis exercere non potest. Et tempore quo ꝑdictum regnum vacavit per mortem Regis Alexandri ultimi Regis Scocie fuit Deruorgulda mater ꝑdicti Johis de Balliolo supstes que racione ꝑdicta regnare non potuit nec debuit: Et sic jus ip̃ius Regni predc̃o Robo tanq^a^m masculo et in equali gradu cum ꝑdicta Deruorgulda existenti sine medio debet resortiri, ꝓpter insufficientiam dicte Deruorgulde, quia mulier. Unde petit idem Robs q̄ habito respectu ad leges regales per quas Reges regnant et regnare debent et etiam ad exempla per ip̃m producta q̄ dictus Dominꝰ Rex jus suum velit declarare et sibi justiciam exhibere.

8 Ad hoc Dominꝰ Johes de Balliolo p̄ consilium suū respondit et dixit q̄ dictum Regnū Scocie non potest nec debet eidem Robo de Brus quovis modo de jure adjudicari pro eo q̄ ubi predictus Robs de Brus in peticione sua petit Regnū Scocie cum suis ꝓtinenciis ut rectior et proximior heres ip̃ius Regni, eo q̄ Witts Rex Scocie antecessor ejus frater David Comitis Huntingdoñ fuit seisitus de ꝑdicto Regno Scocie in dominico suo ut de feodo et jure tempore pacis et tempore Regis Henr̃ proavi Domini Regis Angl qui nunc est, Et de ip̃o Witto descendit jus dicti Regni cuidam Alexandro ut filio et heredi qui regnavit et obiit inde seisitus. Et de ipo Alexandro descendit jus ejusdem Regni cuidam Alexandro ut filio et heredi qui similiꝗ regnavit et obiit inde seisitus. Qui quidem Alexander habuit duos filios qui obierunt sine herede de se, patre eoꝝ vivente ⁊ unā filiam Margaretam nomine, Reginam Norwegie, que similiꝗ obiit vivente patre, de qua quidem Margareta exivit quedam alia Margareta cui Dñs Alexander Rex avus ipius Margarete fecit homines suos de Regno suo jurare q ipam tenerent pro Domina dicti Regni Scocie et hoc fecit per scriptum affirmari. Que quidem Margareta obiit sine herede de se per quod jus ꝑdicti Regni debuisset resortiri cuidam David fratri ꝑdicti Witti Regis si statum regnandi expectasset. Et idem David habuit tres filios qui obierunt sine herede de se et qᵃtuor filias, Matildam que obiit sine herede de se Margaretam Isabellam et Adam de qua Isabella exivit Robs de Brus qui nunc petit.

9 Et dicit q ad ipm debet resortiri ꝑdcm Regnū Scocie sine medio ut ad proximiorē in gradu de sangⁱne Regis Alexandri qui ultimo obiit et similiꝗ dicte Margarete in linea collaterali. Et ꝑtea q quidam Alexander paꝗ ꝑdci Regis Alexandri qui ultimo obiit recognovit coram Baronibꝫ suis ipm Robm pro ꝓximiore herede suo si ipm decedere continget sine herede de corpore suo. Et q illud idem dcs Alexander Rex qui ultimo obiit recognovit si absq; herede de corpore suo decederet sciente Deruorgulda matre ꝑdicti Johis de Balliolo et non contradicente: q idem Robs in petitione sua ꝑdicta omissionē fecit in ea parte dce sue peticionis ubi dicit q jus Regni ꝑdicti debuisset resortiri David fratⁱ Regis Witti ꝑ mortem dicte Margarete de Norwegia nullam faciendo mencōem de Margareta Marioria et Isabella filiabꝫ ꝑdicti Regis Witti fratⁱs ꝑdicti David desicut nullum jus potuit nec debuit resortiri ad ꝑdictum David frem predci Regis Witti, nisi ꝑ medium ꝑdcaꝝ filiaꝝ ipius Regis Witti.

10 Et quo ad hoc q idem Robs dicit q jus ꝑdicti Regni debuit ad ipm resortiri sine medio, idem Johes dicit ut pⁱus q nullum jus potest descendere vel resortiri alicui nisi per medium recte linee descendentis vel ascendentis scd̃m leges et consuetudines ut^i^usq, Regni, per quod dicit q̃ omissis aliquib3 vel aliquo de recta linea ascendente vl descendente aliq^d^ jus ad eum non potuit resortiri.

11 Et quo ad hoc q̃ idem Robs dicit q̃ est proximior in gradu eo q̃ dicit q̃ predc̃s David habuit tres filias Margaretam Isabellam et ‖Adam de qua Margareta exivit Deruorgulda et de iĩpa, Johes qui nunc est, et de ꝑdicta Isabella Robs qui nũc petit et sic proximior in gradu per quod dicit se habere melius jus ad regnum ꝑdictum scd̃m consuetudines quoꝫdam Regnoꝫ, dicit idem Johes q̃ quicquid dicit de aliis Regnis et Regionib3 vel de iĩpoꝫ consuetudinib3, in Regnis tamen Anglie et Scocie in quib3 Reges regnãt per successionẽ in recta linea et Comites et Barones eodem modo succedunt in hereditatib3 suis, exitus postnate licet in gradu proximior non excludit exitum p^i^mogenite lic3 remotiorem in gradu in iĩpa recta linea successione durante.

12 Dicit etiam q̃ ex quo ꝑdictus Robs concedit q̃ Margareta antecessor ꝑdicti Johis fuit p^i^mogenita predc̃i David et ꝑdc̃a Isabella mater ꝑdicti Robi postnata et q̃ ꝑdc̃m regnum Scocie non est partibile, per quod dicit q̃ jus iĩpius Regni et iĩpm Regnũ unice ꝑsone debeat remanere videtur ei q̃ in huj^o^modi successione scd̃m leges et consuetudines ut^i^usq, Regni antenata est preferenda postnate, et eadem racõe exitus antenate est preferendus exitui postnate tam racõe p^i^mogeniture q̃^a^ impartibilitatis Regni ꝑdicti. Unde per racões ꝑdictas durante exitu p^i^mogenite nichil juris exitui postnate accrescere potest.

13 Et quo ad hoc quod ꝑdictus Robs dicit q̃ Alexander Rex Scocie filius Regis Witti tenuit eum ꝑ proximiore herede suo si sine herede de se contingeꝫ iĩpm mori et pro tali eum coram Baronib3 suis recognovit idem Johes dicit q̃ quo ad petendum Regnũ ꝑdictum huj^o^modi recognicio sibi valere non debet etiam et si facta fuisset. Et q̃ idem Robs in petitione sua recognoscit q ꝑdictus Alexander obiit seisitus de Regno ꝑdc̃o in dominico suo ut de feodo et jure et q de ꝑdicto Alexandro descendit jus ꝑdicti Regni cuidam Alexandro ut filio et heredi qui similiꝯ obiit inde seisitus. Unde per recognic̃oem suam ꝑdc̃am satis ostendit q ille Alexander sine herede de se non decessit et q jus Regni ꝑdicti ad filium suum ut ad heredem per mortē iꝑius fuit tªnsmissum. Et sic per recognic̃oem predc̃i Alexandri si que facta fuit nichil juris fuit sibi acquisitum.

14 It'm quo ad hoc q ꝑdictus Robs dicit q questio suꝑ jure regnandi habet ꝯminari et judicari ꝑ jus naturale per quod Reges regnant et non per leges et consuetudines inꝯ subditos usitatas, idem Johes dicit q per easdem leges et consuetudines debet Rex Angt Dominꝯ superior Dñs Regni Scotie cognoscere et judicare de dicto Regno Scocie inter petentes, per quas idem Rex Angt de ꝯris et tenementis ad coronam suam spectantibz ⸸si per antecessores suos infra Regnum suū occupatis cognoscit et judicat et antecessores sui cognoscere et judicare solebant, et hoc est per cōmunē legem et consuetudinē Regni sui et non per aliqªs alias leges et consuetudines qualescumqꝫ.

15 Et quo ad hoc quod idem Robs dicit q lex et constitucio que sunt inter tenentes et subjectos suꝑiorē ligare non possunt et ꝑcipue Regem suū: idem Johes dicit q ꝑdictus [Robs] non est in eo casu in quo judicari debet per subjectum sz per superiorem, scilicet per Dominū suū Regem Angt suꝑiorem Dñm dicti Regni Scocie de cujus progenitoribz a tempore cujꝯ nō exstat memoria dictum Regnū Scocie per homagium tenebant et de iꝑo teneri debet. Et iꝑi petentes sint in iꝑius curia Regis et Dñi sui ad recipiendū jus ab eo sicut subditi de tenementis que ab iꝑo tenentur. Unde dicit q ex quo sunt subjecti dc̃o Domino suo Regi Angt et corone sue quolibet jure requiritʳ ut iꝑi tanqª subditi et petentes jus ad Regnū quod de eo tenetur per leges et consuetudines Regni sui debeant judicari. Et dicit q̃ per easdem leges et consuetudines p'mogenita habet ꝑogativam in succedendo tam in hereditatibꝫ impartibilibꝫ q̃ᵃ partibilibꝫ.

16 Ꝑt'm quo ad hoc quod ꝑdictus Robs dicit q̃ consuetudo succedendi in dc̃o Regno Scocie plene facit pro eo, in hoc quod dicit q̃ frater Regis cujusdam ꝑdecedentis ꝑfertur iꝑius filio in successione Regni racione p̃ximitatis in gradu et ad hoc quedam produxit exempla, idem Johes dicit q̃ p̃ hoc quod idem Robs intendit ostendere per exempla ꝑdicta q̃ fraꝑ postnatꝰ regnavit post fr̃em antenatum iꝑius filium repellendo et hoc racione p̃ximitatis in gradu succedendi ‖q̃m in hoc probat q̃ remocior in gradu succedendi ꝑfertur p̃ximiori, quia filius proximior est pat' in gradu hujꝰmodi succedendi q̃ᵃ frater pat's scd̃m leges et consuetudines ut'usq̃ Regni.

17 Et quo ad exemplum quod idem Robs dicit q̃ frater Malcolmi qᵒndam Regis Scocie regnavit immediate post iꝑm Malcolmū ejus filium repellendo: idem Johes recognoscit qd̃ frater ꝑdicti Malcolmi per aliquod tempus modo ꝑdicto regnavit, sꝫ dicit q̃ filius ꝑdicti Malcolmi sic repulsus adivit Dominū suū Witm Regem Angt supiorem Dominū dicti Regni Scocie conquerendo de injuria per fr̃em pat's sui sibi facta: ad cujus querelam idem Dominꝰ Rex Angt fr̃em predicti Malcolmi a predc̃o Regno ejecit et filium ejusdem Malcolmi Regem ejusdem Regni Scocie constituit qui postmodum toto tempore suo regnavit. Dicit etiā idem Johes q̃ post mortē ejusdē Regis filii Malcolmi dictus frater Malcolmi iterato se in ꝑdictum Regnū intrusit et regnare cepit, per quod ad querimoniā cujusdam Edgari sc̃di filii ꝑdicti Malcolmi ꝑdictus Rex Witts superior Dominꝰ ꝑdicti Regni Scocie ꝑdictum fr̃em Malcolmi sic injuste regnantē de eodem Regno Scocie iterato ejecit, et ꝑdictum Edgarū Regem iꝑius Regni constituit. Post quem omnes alii Reges Scocie usq̃ nūc per rectam lineam successionis scd̃m leges et consuetudines in utroq̃ Regno usitatas regnav̄nt.

18 Et quo ad exempla de Yspania et Comitatu Sabaudie, dicit q illa exempla non debent ꝑdicto Robo valere pro eo q alie sunt et diverse leges et consuetudines in Yspania et Sabaudia qª in Regnis Angt et Scocie. Nec Rex debet inter subditos suos per alias leges et consuetudines judicare qª per leges et consuetudines Regnoꝝ quibꝫ preest.

19 Et quo ad hoc quod ꝑdcs Robs dicit q mulier regnare non debet quia officium regiminis exercere non potest, idem Johes dicit q si mulier regnare non debet nec jus regnandi ad ipam descendere vel resortiri. idem Robs nichil juris vendicare potest in Regno ꝑdicto, eo q si aliquod jus de ipo Regno ad eum resortiri deberet, hoc esse non potest nisi p mediū Isabelle matis sue. Unde dicit q si nullū jus regnandi ad dcam Isabellam matrē suam resortiri potuit nec ad ipm Robm nisi per eandem Isabellam tanqª ad filium descendere quoquomodo. Dicit eciam q idem Robs ‖erat in hujꝰmodi dicto suo sibi ipi contªrius. Et quia satis notorium est q tam ipe Robs qª omnes alii Comites Barones Proceres et Magnates Regni Scocie juraverunt fidelitatem Margarete filie Regis Norwegie que ultimo obiit, Domina et Regina dicti Regni Scocie, et ipam pro Regina et Domina tenūnt et sic ‖erat idem Robs modo negando verbo quod prius facto concesserat, quod quidem factum dedicere non potest, unde cum sit plene recognitū q Witts Rex Scocie fuit seisitus de ꝑdco Regno Scocie et de ꝑdicto Witto descendit jus Alexandro ut filio ꝛ heredi. Et de ꝑdco Alexandro cuidam Alexandro ut filio et heredi qui ultimo obiit Rex Scocie. Et predictus Robs non dedicit nec dedicere potest quin de ꝑdicto Alexandro descendit jus cuidam Alexandro ut filio et heredi qui obiit sine herede de se. 19–20 Ed. I.—The reasons or allegations propounded by Sir Robert Bruce, Lord of Annandale, for the purpose of proving that he is entitled to the Kingdom of Scotland, as nearest heir of the Royal blood.

1 Cestes sont les resons Sire Robt de Brus par les queles resons il entent monstrer par veie de reson e de dreit, q̃ il deit estre plus ꝑcein au Reaume de Escoce, q̃ Sire Johan de Baillol, ou nul autre q̃ dreit y demande.

R. ♣ad id̃ ♣ 2 Adep^i^mes vous monstre Sire Roberd de Brus, qe il est plus ꝑcheyn heir du Reaume d Escoce t deyt estre receu devant touz les autres demaundanz desicome tote la lyne descendaunt de Williame iadis Rey d Escoce est anyentie e esteynte. E revsion dust estre a David Conte de Huntyngdon frere le Rey Williame, e ael l avandite Sire Roberd de Brus s il ust ete en vie au tens qe l avandit Reaume se voida ꝑ defaute de saunk en dreit lyne del avandit Williame. E desicome Sire Roberd fuist e est plus ꝑchein heir en degree e de saunk muliere en lyne collatal a cel tens ke le Reaume se voyda, est avys a luy ꝑ dreit e ꝑ la ley ꝑ quele Reys regnent, ke il deyve plus de droit aver ke nul des autres qe demandent, desicome touz les autres demandaunz descendaunt du saunk muyliere de meyme la lyne collatal ne ne sont ‖fiz de freres ne de soers a celuy ne a cele qe dereyn morurunt seysi du Reaume d Escoce. E por ceo deit le droyt venir a luy ꝑ la ley avantdite, come a celuy ke est plus ꝑcheyn du saunk qe nul des autres descendu du saunk muyliere en meyme la lyne collat̃al.

.R. ad id̃. 3 Derechef, dist meyme celuy Sire Roberd de Brus por son dreit averrer a nostre Seigneur le Rey, ke Sire Johan de Balliol nul dreit puet demaunder a l avandit Reaume si non p̃ reson de sa Mere, ||dount il ne puet estre en meillur condicioun al reaume demaunder qe sa Mere ne fust, si ele ust ete en pleyne vie, al tens ke le Reaume se voyda. mes ore est issi, ke si ele ust este en vie en tel tens ele ne pust nul dreit demander en l avandite Reaume d Escoce, desicome ele fust en oel degre ovek Sire Roberd de Brus, en quel cas saunk madle est plus digne e plus pur, al Reaume demaunder e governer, qe saunk femel, nomement por ceo ke Reaume ne puet ne ne deyt estre departi.

.R. ad id̃. 4 Derechef, dist meyme celuy Sire Roberd de Brus, qe nul usage du Reaume d Escoce puet estre trove quant al Reaume qe seyt contrarie a la peticion l avandit Sire Roberd, ne qe forbarrer luy puisse de sa demaunde, kar tel cas ne avynt onkes sa en areres al Reaume de Escoce quant al dreyt du Reaume, mes ore est issi ke la reson par quey les collat̃als sont receuz al dreit demaunder en Reaume en defaute de saunk descendaunt, e p̃cheynte de saunk en degre, dont nule ||reson ne dirra qe ly plus loynteyn de saunk seyt plus p̃cheyn a heriter, ne ceo cas ne avynt unkes al Reaume d Escoce ||dont desicome Sire Johan de Baillol fust plus loynteyn de un degre du saunk real qe dreyn morust seisi du Reaume d Escoce al tens ke meyme le Reaume se voyda, e Sire Roberd plus p̃cheyn a meyme le saunk, e uncore est, nule reson sereyt ke l avandite

Johan de Baillol pust forbarrer Sire Roberd de Brus de sa demaunde.

.R. ad id̄. 5 Derechef, dist meyme celuy Sire Roberd de Brus, qe debat du Reaume deit estre determine ꝑ meyme le dreit, ꝑ le quel Reaume est non deꝑtable, mes ceo est dreit naturel ꝑ le quel Reis regnent e nule custume usee entre suget e tenaunz de Reaume d Escoce. Arguments and examples adduced by Robert Bruce to show that no vested or transmissible right was acquired by Dervergoil, the Mother of John Baillol.

1 . . . . . Reaume . . . . . Margarete Dame d Escoce . . . . . nostre . . . . . pcheyn heyr en degre e plus digne de saunk par la reeson qe en tens le Rey Alisaundre estre . . . . . lol fust morte e nul dreyt du Reaume: ne de regner ne luy eust acreu a adonc Dervorguill mere . . . . . Johan en vie: ou nul dreit al avandit . . . . . vivaunte Dervorguill ne poet acrestre: ne a l avandite Dervorguill . . . . . qar en cel tens Roberd de Brus

fust en . . . . . degre, a Dervorguilt t male muyliere de plus digne saunk e ley . . . . . les Reys regnent e Reaumes descendent ou resortent, est qe fem̄e en lyne costaunt de celui de qi le heritage . . . . . est demaunde ne deit regner taunt come il y ad male muyliere ausi pres en degre. E estre ceo en tens Margarete dereyne Dame d Escoce: nul si ꝑcheyn ne fust en degre ne de son saunk si digne come Sire Roberd de Brus . . . . qe taunt come saunk est plus eloygne en degree meynz est pur e plus est esloyne del ꝑmer auncestre . . . . . Johan de Baillol est plus loynz en degree bien piert ꝑ sa mustraunce demeyne. E estre ceo a ceo qe la ley reale par la . . . . Reis regnent, voet qe le plus ꝑcheyn en degre seyt heir du Reaume: usage en Escoce en ꝑsone de Reys le voet ainsi sicome piert ꝑ cronicle qe plusurs fez en Escoce est avenu.

2 E ne semble pas a Sire Roberd de Brus qe nule ꝑrogative de eynesce qe Sire Johan de Baillol allegge de Margarete sa aele li deive fere ꝑjudice a sa demaunde del Reaume avoir come heir du saunk ꝑchein en degre, desicome il meymes conust qe cele Margarete unqes estat ne atendi ꝑ quey ꝑ cele ꝑrogative rien a luy puisse acrestre: ne reeson de ꝑrogative en sa ꝑsone ꝑndre effect, ne rien a sa issue femele doner de droit de reaume avoir taunt come heir madle muyliere ausi ꝑcheyn en degre fust aparaunt en tens qe le droit de Reaume resorti en lyne costaunt: desicome le dreyt en ly meymes meyntenaunt apres la mort la dereyne seisi, en la dreyte lyne descendaunt demorra al plus ꝑcheyn en degre, en plus pur e le plus digne saunk [en] amuntaunce e ceo fust en meyme le tens Sire Roberd de Brus, qe ore pur la seisine avoir suyt vers son sovereyn Seigneur.

3 ſ . . . . . il dient qe la ꝑrogative de la Seigneurie deit estre a l eynesse, de ci qe totes sont fem̄es: il est a saver qe ceo fet la necessite de la defaute de madle aparaunt en ꝑcheynte du saunk, de ceaus qe sont en meisme le degre, dont il est avis ꝑ dreit qe cele ꝑrogative ne puet plus longes ꝑ la reposer mes qe al tens de cel estat, e ꝑ ceste reson, qar fem̄e ne puet due service fere a son chief Seigneur, sicome dit le dreyt par quey Reys regnent come en dreyt de armes porter en host, e de conseiller, e autres plusours choses qe apendent a fere a chief Seigneur ꝑ la reson del homage, sicome dist le dreit, dont si le ꝑmereyn degre ꝑ mort seyt ouste e voillez aviser le second degre de la ꝑmereyne lyne, e de la secounde troverez madle aparaunt qe defet la reson de la ꝑmereyne necessite, e qi puet fere le service a chief Seigneur qe apent, e si reposera en ly, e ꝑcheynte du saunk e usage du Reaume acordera . . . . . le forbarre fem̄e ꝑ usage du Reaume a demaunder Reaume si il seient en meyme le degre.

4 ſ Estre ceo, defendu est a feme ꝑ dreyt ꝑ quey Reys regnent qe ele ne se entremet de office de juge de ne avocat, ne de autre chose qe a hom̄e apent e a luy est desavenaunt e damageus a autri, come a chief Seignur come avant est dit, dont ꝑ necessite por eschuire le inconvenient qe Reaume ne seit partible come en le cas de treis soers, ou nus sumes: ꝑrogative chet en l eynesse: est avis ꝑ dreyt qe bon juge ceo deit aforcer teu ꝑil ouster e a cōmun dreit resorter la quele chose il purra fere ore apar meymes en le cas ou nus sumes, en dreit de Sire Roberd de Brus en qi est ꝑcheinte de saunk, e usage du Reaume se acorde a luy, e dreit de chief Seigneur * sauve en luy: les queles choses defaudreyēt en les degres de fēme de la ꝑmereyne lyne.

.R. ad id. 5 Estre ceo le dreyt ꝑ quey Reys regnent dit, qe si vous seyez heir fet en le testament de aucun, sur ꝓteyne condicioun, e avant ‖muretez qe la condicion aveigne: rien ‖puet tanſmettre a vře successour, e ceo est a saver quant l ‖um parle de les degres collaꝓaus [‖dont les dreitz q̃ autre chose dient, parlent en cas especial ou hors des collateraus] par meisme la reson piert qe ceste eynesse rien poet tanſmettre a l issue de ly de si qe ele morust, e estat ne atendi del heritage . . . . . nous parloms.

6 ſ Par la quarte reson piert qe cest usage ne deit apres la mort l eynesse, ceste ꝓrogative doner a sa fille, de si qe la volente de dreit ne est mie qe fēme deyt regner ou madle puet aparer qe seyt en ouel degre ꝑ les resons avant dites, car le dreyt dist, qe si pince done pivilegie a pere qi a son fiz aloygne de son sen qe il puisse fere testament, la quele chose fere ne puet de cōmun dreyt, teu pivilegie qe est contre furme de dreyt dure tant come le fiz . . . re en tel estat, e par autre veie ne puet estre conseille a luy e [a] ses . . . ns: mes si tost qe le sen luy soit revenu ne dure plus avant l avantdit pivilege issi est avis en nostre cas qe si tost come madle soit nee de la seconde lyne . . . avant cele qe nasquist en la ꝑmereyne lyne en meyme le degre ove luy, ne puet durer la force del usage qe done p̊rogative p̊ necessite a feme de regner . . . .

. . . . . comun dreyt.

7 Estre ceo le dreit dist qe l Apostoille de Rome deposa le Rey de Fraunce de sa reale dignite por ceo qe il fust dissolut de son cors e maveez aveit . . . . . sicom les estoires de Fraunce dient, e trove est en dreit, dont il piert si home de tiel condicion deit de reaute estre depose: par mout plus forte reson feme ne deit estre receue a reale dignite ne t^a^nsmettre a ses successours, de ci qe en meisme le degree madle seit aparant come est en nostre cas.

8 Estre ceo le dreit dist qe possession de biens est un dreit p̊ quey len demande les biens et heritage, qe est due apres la mort de celuy qe est Seigneur de meyme cele heritage. Or dist le dreit qe si celuy moirge qe meillur dreit en ad por le tens, avant la mort del Seigneur de cele heritage, avant la mort de celuy Seigneur rien porra t^a^nsmettre a ses successours mes ||demoert ove luy le dreit qe est plus p̊cheyn du saunk, al tens de la mort le Seigneur, dont piert qe en Sire Roberd de Brus meilleur dreyt deit reposer qe est plus p̊cheyn du saunk qe en Sire Johan de Baillol qe est en plus loygteyn degree: sauve a Sire Roberd de Brus de plus dire si cestes resons ne luy suffisent solom les leys d Escoce.

32 Ed. I.—Proposals made by the King's Ambassadors to Comyn as to the terms upon which he and his party are to be admitted to come in to the King's peace.

1 ꝟ Ces sont les choses parlees entre les messages nr̃e Seign[r] le Roy, ꝛ Mons̃ Johan Comyn, por li ꝛ por touz ceux d Escoce de sa ꝑtie, come por ceux a queux il est tenuz, par ſment ⁊ par autre seurte, sicome Monſ̃ Robt le filz Paegn saſva dire. les queux choses se poont faire, s il plest a nr̃e Seignr le Roy. Et est assaſv q̃ mon Seignr le Prince ⁊ les bones gentz "———" qui entour li sont, si acordent bien, tant come en eux est ⁊ pient a nr̃e [Seignr] le Roy, qu il si vueille ausint acorder: s il ne vee son damage, ou sa hounte, ce qu il ne veent mie.

2 ☙ Primerement ha este parle por Monſ̃ Johan Comyn q̃ la ou gante fu, q̃ sauvez li feussent vie ⁊ membre ⁊ qu il feust quites d enpisonement, ⁊ de touz trespas, ⁊ de totes maſ̃es de choses, qu il ha levees ⁊ fait leſv en temps de guerre, ⁊ de ranzon ausint, et retenist les terres de son ancien ĥitage par ensi, qu il tenist exil, par un an hors d Escoce: meisme celi Johan, por reſvence, ⁊ por honeur de nr̃e Seigneur le Roy, ⁊ por plus approcher a sa bone volunte: se met des ſtres "———", ⁊ de totes les autres choses desusdites, en la volunte ⁊ en la grce nr̃e Seignr le Roy, sauve q̃ son corps ne soit enprisonez, ⁊ il tendra l exil, sicome nr̃e Seignr le Roy l ad devise, avant ceste houre. Et dit bien, qu il ne tendroit terre, ne autre chose, sanz le bon gre, ⁊ la bone volunte de son Seignr lige, sicome Monſ̃ Robt le filz Paegn saſva plus pleinement dire.

3 ☙ Endroit des autres gentz d Escoce, forpris quatre, qui sont cy aſps nomez: parle est, q̃ sauve lor soient vie ⁊ membre, et qu il soient quites d enpisonement, ⁊ qu il ne soient desheritez. Issint ✝ totes voies ✝, q̃ de lor ranzon ⁊ des amendes, des trespas, qu il ont faitz, a nr̃e Seignr le Roy, ⁊ de l establissement de la terre d Escoce: il se mettent en l ordenance du dit nr̃e Seigneur le Roy. Et est entendu, q̃ les heirs qui sont dedenz age deivēt joyr de meismes ces condicions, q^a^nt [a] quitance de vie ⁊ de membre, ⁊ d enp^i^sonement, ⁊ de desh̃itance, et esteront de lor ranzon, ⁊ de totes autres choses, a ce q̃ nr̃e Seign^r^ le Roy en ordenna, a son p̃chein ꝑlemēt. Et demorront totes les fermetez, qui sont orendroit en la meyn nr̃e Seign^r^ le Roy, ⁊ des siens, en la tenance qu il sont ore, jesq̃s al p̃chein ꝑlement, si q̃ nr̃e Seign^r^ le Roy en ordeine sa volunte a cele houre. Et deivent les p^i^s de guerre, estre delivres, d une ꝑt, ⁊ d autre, forspris Mons̃ Herbt de Morham, ⁊ son piere.

4 ☙ Les quatre ꝑsones forsp^i^ses, sicome est desusdit: sont le Seneschal d Escoce, Mons̃ Johan de Soules, Mons̃ Symon Fras̃, ⁊ Thomas du Boys.— Dont il est parle, q̃ le Seneschal ⁊ Mons̃ Johan de Soules, soient as condicions de ceux du cōmun, sicome est desus escrit, ⁊ outre ce tiegnent exil, par deux anz hors d Escoce, ⁊ par dela Trente. et demoergent les chasteux du dit Seneschal, en la meyn nr̃e Seign^r^ le Roy, durant l exil. Et se face ||lu garde, as coustages de meisme le Seneschal, selonc ce q̃ l en v̄ra q̃ face a faire resnablement.

5 ☙ Et [q^a^nt] a Mons̃ Symon Fras̃ ⁊ Thomas du Boys, qu il soient ausint as condicions de ceux du cōmun, sicome est avantdit, ⁊ outre ce tiegnent exil ꝑ trois anz, hors de la Seign^r^ie nr̃e Seign^r^ le Roi, ⁊ du Roy de F^a^nce ausint, s il ne peussent plus g^a^nt g^a^ce trov̄ en le meyn temps.

6 ☙ Iť remembre soit, a Mons̃ Robt, si les avantdites choses se g^a^ntent, qu il porte ove li lettres de conduit, por Monš Johan Comyn, ⁊ por touz ceux de sa compaignie, en venant jesq̃s a Dunfermelyn, illueq̃s demorant, ⁊ dillueq̃s retornant, a durer, jesq̃s au xx^{me}. jour de cest moys de Feϑer.
